Batasan 5's bold challenge: Come and get us

By Philip C. Tubeza and Juliet Labog-Javellana

IE THEY ARE ARRESTED, IT WILL BE politically bloody for the administration of President Macapagal-Arroyo, the five left-wing party-list lawmakers in the protective custody of the House of Representatives warned yesterday.

Representatives Satur Ocampo, Teodoro Casiño and Joel Virados of Muna, Rafael Mariano of Anakpawis, and Liza Maza of Gabriela said at a press conference that they had decided to leave the Batasan complex tomorrow despite the police threat to ar-

The lawmakers now collectively known as the "Batasan 5" asserted that the government had no case against them after Makati Judge Jenny Lind Delorino rejected on Thursday an amended criminal complaint filed by the Department of Justice.

The complaint sought to include the Batasan 5, former Sen. Gregorio "Gringo" Honasan and 40 others in the rebellion case earlier filed against Anakpawis Rep. Crispin Beltran and 1st Lt. Lawrence San Juan. They declared their innoceace of the charge and said the government would first have to secure a warrant from the courts before the police could arrest them.

Ocampo said he and his colleagues would sue administration officials should the police insist on arresting them.

Said Casiño: "If we are arrested when we go out (tomorrow), it will not be violent. We will not resist, but it will be bloody, politically bloody, for the Arroyo

They will bleed in the courts. They will bleed at the bar of public opinion for their illegal and immoral act. They should first think about this."

Culion: Island of living dead no longer

By Volt Contreras

CULION, PALAWAN-THIS ISLAND-TOWN marked its centennial yesterday as a "leper colony," but it continues to nurse the hope that the dreaded disease would finally be stricken off public health statistics and, more importantly, the public psyche.

That hope is perhaps best expressed by one of the guests who showed up, a young woman who, despite being declared cured of leprosy in 2001, managed to find a regular job only six months ago.

By her own account, the case of Chris Fernandez, 30, illustrates the plight of many Filipinos scourged by this ancient disease, one that Jesus Christ was said to have banished

"We can handle the physical pain," she told the Inquiera in Filipino. "It's the discrimination owing to the lack of understanding about the nature of the disease that hurts us more

Chris said the first symptoms appeared when she was a sixth-grader in Tacloban City: White spots on her hands and cheeks that turned reddish whenever she got tired.

Coming from a poor family with meager means for medical care, she endured these recurring symptoms until she was in college in Manila.

By the time she was diagnosed with leprosy, her face and hands had become slightly disfigured. She was then in her sophomore year in accounting and bookkeeping at the National College of Business Administration in Sta. Mesa.

CHRIS Fernandez, a former leprosy patient, now holds a job after years of looking: "We can handle the physical pain. It's the discrimination that hurts us more deeply."

Her guardian in Manila, a friend of her mother's, sent her back to Tacloban. She ended up at the Eversley Childs Sanitarium in Mandaue City, Cebu, where she was treated for two years from 1996 to 1997.

Chris would have a "relapse" in 1999 but was pronounced cured a year later.

Since her discharge from the sanitarium, she has been living alone in a rented room in Skio Sta. Cruz, Barangay Jaguibio, Mandaue

At one point, a nongovernment organization, the Philippine Leprosy Mission Inc. (PL-MI) granted her a scholarship that enabled her to earn a degree in elementary education at the University of the Visayas.

Armed with a diploma, she went job-hunting in Cebu-only to realize that her hardships, even as an ex-PWL (person with leprosy), had merely entered a new chapter.

"I applied for many jobs-store cashier, saleswoman, call center agent, office staff. I would always pass the written exams," Chris said. "But it's during the interview that they would begin to ask questions about the scars

3 railway execs charged with plunder

By TJ Burgonio

THE GOVERNMENT SERVICE INSURANCE SYStem (GSIS) yesterday filed plunder charges against three top officials of the Philippine National Railways Corp. with the Ombudsman for allegedly failing to remit their employees' GSIS contributions in the amount of P132 million.

Charged were PNR general with the Ombudsman. manager Jose Ma. I. Sarasola II, assistant general manager Rafael F. Mosura and finance department head Lynn A. Chung.

GSIS chief legal counsel Leighton Siazon filed the complaint against the PNRC officials

The PNRC officials could be held liable for plunder, largescale estafa, grave misconduct, dishonesty, oppression of PNR workers, conduct prejudicial to the best interest of service and gross neglect of duty, the GSIS said in a statement.

ness, abuse of confidence and deceitful conduct, the officials misappropriated, misapplied and/or converted the amount they collected and deducted, to the damage and prejudice of the GSIS and its members," the GSIS said.

Siazon also requested the Ombudsman to subpoena documents such as payroll records, Commission on Audit observation reports, financial statements and individual employee accounts

These documents would prove that PNR officials and personnel "connived to accumulate, amass and acquire" over P50 million in GSIS funds in violation of the plunder law, Siazon said.

The GSIS also urged the Ombudsman to issue a preventive suspension order against the PN-RC officials pending the conduct of administrative proceedings against them.

The suspension would preempt the tampering of officials records, documents and other evidence and stop PNRC officials and personnel from "exerting undue influence, coercion and threat" against employees who might turn wit-

Oil on top of GMA agenda in Saudi Arabia

By Gil C. Cabacungan Jr. and Abigail L. Ho

PRESIDENT MACAPAGAL-ARROYO WILL EXplore ways to soften the impact of rising crude oil prices on the Filipino people in her talks with top officials of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, the country's main source of oil.

"We still don't know the possible arrangements that can be agreed on, whether this will be on supply or the price," Presidential Chief of Staff Michael Defensor said.

Defensor said that a possibility would be to course Saudi Arabia's support through Saudi Aramco which also owns Petron Corp., the country's biggest petroleum company, in partnership with the Philippine government.

"She might explore the links between Saudi Aramco and Petron to make special arrangements to ease the impact of oil prices on the public," Defensor said. Ms Arroyo is expected to tour the facilities of Aramco during her visit.

In her departure statement yesterday, before leaving for Macau and thence for

Saudi Arabia, President Arroyo said: "I have high hopes for the future of our relations and I hope that my visit to Saudi Arabia will further strengthen our ties, reinforce commitments, as well as open new avenues for cooperation and engagement."

The President has encouraged Petron and other of suppliers to sell discounted diesel in more gasoline stations outside Metro Manila to benefit more public utility drivers.

For the second time this month, oil firms yesterday raised pump prices of gasoline, diesel and kerosene by 50 centavos a liter.

Pilipinas Shell Petroleum Corp. and Chevron Philippines Inc. raised prices Saturday morning, followed by new player Flying V at 12:01 a.m. today.

Eastern Petroletum Corp. increased prices at 5 a.m., followed by Petron Corp. and Unioil Petroleum Philippines Inc. an hour later. The oil firms cited the increase in international oil prices for the latest price hike. Data from the Department of Bnergy showed that Dubai crude jumped to an average of $68.23 a barrel as of May 3 from $64.14 a barrel in April.

Hacienda Luisita farmers want individual land titles

By Tonette Orejas

PDI Central Luson Desk

CITY OF SAN FERNANDO-AN ORganization of more than 1,000 farm workers at Hacienda Luisita in Tarlac is urging the Department of Agrarian Reform to issue them individual titles when the agency begins to parcel out the sugar estate to them in June.

Noel Mallari, chair of the Farm Workers Agrarian Reform Movement (Farm), said members from Barangays Mabilog, Parang and Pando in the Concepcion town side of the estate preferred individual land titles because this was the spirit of the Comprehensive Agrarian Reform Pro-

For effective control

"We want effective control over the land and to have individual management of it so that we could really be productive," Mallari said.

Titling the property to an organization, he said, would not do away with the previous arrangement where the Hacienda Luisita Inc. represented them in a stock distribution option mechanism that the Pres Agrarian Reform Council revoked late last year.

The SDO scheme lasted for 16

agrarian reform.

To secure individual land ownership, Mallari said the DAR should annotate the names of the final beneficiaries at the back of the Certificate of Land Ownership Awards (CLOAs), assign them farm lots and position them there.

'Spurious list'

The selection of beneficiaries should not be based on the SDO master list which, he said, was spurious.

"We hope the DAR would stick to the qualifications stated in the law (Section 22 of Republic Act No. 6657, the CARP law)," he said.

Mallari said his organization expected the DAR to help beyond land distribution by assisting the beneficiaries in obtaining training in management and technology as well as production capital. The group intends to continue growing sugar alongside other cash crops and raising livestock and poultry, he said.

Collectively owned

DAR Regional Director Teofilo Inocencio said the Cojuangeo familyowned Hacienda Luisita would be collectively owned through CLOAs and maintained in large parcels.

DAR records showed that the es-they did not benefit from this form of tate totaled 5,938 hectares. Of these, at least 4,874 hectares were eligible for CARP. Titles for another 1,025 hectares had been cancelled for cohversion to industrial use. At least 38 hectares were used for roads and Mallari has asked the DAR to stop pitting his organization against the United Luisita Workers Union (Ulwu), saying their members were farin workers who could qualify for CARP. Rene Galang, Ulwu chair, disagreed with the DAR's mode of distributing the land in batches.

No to partial distribution

"The distribution should not be done partially. The whole of Luisita should be given to the beneficiaries," Galang said in a separate th-

Ulwu, he said, wanted to own the land collectively so its long-term ownership would be assured.

"Individual Townership Is difficult because some beneficiaries may sell their parcels. We would like to cultivate the land in a bayanihan (community cooperation) way," he said.

He said the Ulwu and the DAR would finalize the list of beneficiaries of the land distribution. With a report from Jo Martinez-Clemente, PDI Central Luzon Desk

GMA names Fianza new racing commission chief

By Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

PRESIDENT MACAPAGAL-ARROYO IS SET TO announce the appointment of former police Chief Supt. Florencio Fianza as head of the Philippine Racing Commission (Philracom) following the dismissal of its former chief on corruption charges.

This was confirmed by Presidential Chief of Staff Michael Defensor amid speculation that the ouster of former Philracom chair Jaime Dilag and National Dairy Authority administrator Salvacion M. Bulatao were politically motivated.

Dilag was recommended to Philracom in 2002 by Jose "Peping" Cojuangco who was linked by a Time magazine report to the failed Feb. 24 coup plot against President Arroyo which was reportedly hatched in his Porbes Park mansion.

Bulatao is the wife of Gerry Bulatao, a convenor of the Black and White Movement which is actively seeking President Arroyo's resignation.

Three Philracom board members-Eduardo Jose, Rogelio Tandiama and Reynaldo Fernando-have tendered their resignations in protest of his dismissal, Dilag said.

Dilag said the Philippine Anti-Graft Commission, which recommended his dismissal for alleged malversation of funds, should have tossed the case against him to the Ombudsman.

The PAGC charged Dilag with misappropriating funds corresponding to the prizes in Philracom-sponsored races, non-remittance of unclaimed dividends and hiring a public relations firm without a public bidding.

"I would not have lasted this long in my position if I was doing what they accused me of," said Dilag. in the case of Bulatao, the former NDA head disputed the findings of the PAGC which accused her of hiring a foreign consultant and a multinational ad agency without public bidding. She said she rushed the hiring of a foreign consultant in 2001 because she was still new in the job and she had heeded the advice of industry old-timers. Bulatao also said that McCann Erickson's services were free.

"I sincerely believe the punitive measures imposed on me and the adverse publicity of my dismissal are unfair," said Bulatao, who had occupied the post since 2001. "I have been accused not of stealing even a single centavo but of ignoring bidding procedures twice."

THE SANDIGANBAYAN HAS postponed two scheduled hearings in former President Joseph Estrada's trial, giving the deposed leader two weeks to prepare for the last part of his direct testimony and get ready for crossexamination by state prosecutors eager to nail him on plunder and perjury charges.

The court called off hearings scheduled for Wednesday and May 17 because two of its three judges-Presiding Justice Teresita Leonardo de Castro and Associate Justice Diosdado Peralta-will be in Cebu City from May 10 to May 17 for regular out-of-town hearings of the antigraft court's First

HE WAS JUST DOING HIS JOB,

This was what Sen. Jinggoy Estrada said in reply to the P10-million libel suit slapped on him by First Gentleman Jose Miguel Arroyo in March for linking the President's husband to big-time smuggling.

Estrada, accompanied by lawyers Noel Malaya and Margarita Briones, filed a ninepage counter-affidavit with assistant prosecutor Manuel Ortega of Pasay City at 3 p.m. Friday. The document asked for the dismissal of the suit, saying it had no basis and failed to establish that a crime had been committed against Arroyo.

"It is plain and purely a political harassment," Estrada told reporters.

Estrada said his statements linking Arroyo to resin importer Sammy Lee and Pure Gold Duty Free Shop owner Lucio Co, both allegedly notorious smugglers, were made in the performance of his legal, moral and social duties and were made without any malice.

The allegedly libelous statements were made by Estrada during a privilege speech as well as in a news conference.

"It is clear that my statements were simply counter-affidavit on May 23.

an expression of hope, coupled with a challenge to the executive branch of the present government to swiftly and effectively act on the proliferation of smugglers despite surmounting difficulties," he stated in his counter-affidavit.

He said the allegedly libelous statements attributed to him were based on privilege speeches made by other senators during their deliberations on the 2006 budget and antismuggling bills.

"My statements were nothing but a fair and true account of what transpired during the session and deliberations," he said. His statements were logical conclusions drawn from "credible reports" and speeches by his colleagues, he added.

He told reporters that the libel charge against him won't stop him from doing his duty as a senator.

"I will still do my responsibilities as a senator of the republic. I will expose all the countless anomalies under the present government," he said.

Arroyo's lawyer, Melanie Trinidad, who was also present at the prosecutor's office, said she would file a reply to Estrada's

He was one of the pioneers of the old Makati Stock Exchange in the 1970s.

At the forefront of information technology reforms, Villaroman helped map out the PSE's settlement and clearing system and put a registry system in place.

Kings and sheikhs of the oil-rich Gulf Arab states still top the Forbes list, to be published in its May 22 edition.

The list is topped by Saudi King Abdullah, 82, who became Saudi Arabia's sixth king in August 2005 and is worth an estimated $21 billion, according to Forbes.

In second place, with $20 billion, is 59-year-old Sultan Hassanal Bolkish of Brunei, followed by the president of the United Arab Emirates, Sheikh Khalifa bin Zayed al-Nahayan, 58, with $19 billion.

Dubai's ruler, 56-year-old Sheikh Mohammed bin Rashid al-Maktoum, came in fourth, with $14 billion. Perhaps the most industrious of the leaders, Forbes estimates the renowned racehorse breeder also helped raise Dubai's gross domestic product from about $8 billion to nearly $40 billion since 1994 by diversifying its industries outside of oil and making successful investments overseas.

"He would probably be the shrewdest of the bunch," said Luisa Kroll, associate editor at Forbes. Fifth in the list is Prince Hans-Adam II of Liechtenstein, 61, who improved upon his family fortune of palaces, real estate and artwork with an investment in a US producer of hybrid rice, for total estimated riches of $4

Castro came in seventh, with the $900 million credited to him by Forbes, which cited former Cuban officials as saying that Castro had skimmed profits from a Havana convention center, retail conglomerate Cimex and vaccine and pharmaceutical products firm Medicuba to amass his fortune.

It noted, however, that "Castro. for the record, disagrees, insisting his personal net worth is zero."

Castro had said he was considering suing after Forbes released its 2005 list, scoffing then at the report that his wealth was estimated to be close to that of the queen of England. This year, Castro would be well above the British monarch.

"Do they think I am (former Zairian President) Mobutu (Sese Seko) or one of the many millionaires, those thieves and plunderers that the empire has suckled and protected?" he said last year, referring to his capitalist archenemy, Washington.

Africa's Teodoro Obiang Nguema Mbasogo, 63-year-old president of Equatorial Guinea, made the list of wealthiest leaders for the first time. He is estimated to hold up to $600 million, the magazine said, although an oil boom has not prevented his country's slide down the United Nations' development rankings.

Forbes said Oblang and his government deposited up to $700 million in the US bank formerly known as Riggs Bank but noted that "Equatorial Guinea's embassy insists the money, which was released back to the country, belongs to the government."

"Attributing that money to President Obiang's personal wealth is like saying a person who runs a hospital is worth the amount of revenue the hospital generates," an embassy spokesperson told Forbes in an e-mail.

A copy of the list, compiled by Forbes editors and not confirmed by the royals themselves, was released on Thursday.

Forbes acknowledged that the list was difficult to compile.

"These fortunes are derived from inheritances or positions of power. And the lines often blur between what is owned by the country and what is owned by the individual," it said. "Even stickier: Proving a dictator controls funds and uses them the group, Ocampo said he and his colleagues had "come to a decision" to leave the Batasan premises tomorrow.

"We shall assert our freedom and our rights, both as legislators backed by the mandate of the people and as citizens, specifically against the political persecution of the Arroyo government," Ocampo said.

"In the same breath, we assert our innocence of the spurious charge of rebellion against us and some of our colleagues in the democratic mass movement. The serious charge is rendered so incredible and ridiculous by the sort of documentary evidence produced pell-mell by the Philippine National Police and endorsed by the [DOJ]," he said.

Mariano said the PNP-Criminal Investigation and Detection Group could not arrest them just because the DOJ had said so.

"The so-called standing order from the [DOJ] is not a valid warrant of arrest. It would be unlawful. irregular and highly condemnable if the PNP-CIDG will arrest us once we assert our rights and freedom [tomorrow]," he said.

He also said it would be "politically costly for the fascist Arroyo regime to forcefully and brutally

"Ms Arroyo will surely draw a major political backlash not only from our constituencies but [alsol from the Filipino people," he added.

'Insufficient evidence'

Citing Judge Delorino's resolution, Ocampo noted that the "numerous enclosures to the original information"-392 documents in all-"could hardly cover the width and breadth of the detailed allegation raised."

"In brief, insufficient evidence," he said, adding:

Thus, as of this moment there is no case of rebellion against us filed in any court.

"Even if the DOJ will file a motion for reconsideration or a new information, as it publicly declared it would do, such charge cannot depart from the discredited heap of papers it had submitted to the Makati Regional Trial Court Branch 137." Ocampo said he and his colleagues had endured living in Congress for more than two months after the House leadership and the executive branch failed to agree on how to resolve their case.

"On the one hand, through House Resolution No. 133, the House backed by the Senate through a similar resolution expressing the sense of Congress, the lawmaking body, aver we are not under arrest or detention but under protective custody, specifically, against illegal or warrantless arrest.

"On the other hand, the DOJ and the PNP both implementing agencies of laws passed by Congress, claim we either have been arrested and are in detention or will be arrested once we step out of the premises of the Batasan."

'We are free to leave'

Ocampo expressed hope that all the other lawmakers in the House and the Senate would back their stand that "we, the Batasan 5, are free to leave the Batasan premises" and that Beltran, who is detained at Camp Crame, should be released.

He said the stand-off between the executive branch and Congress over their case "only exposes the highly undemocratic and antidemocratic tendency, if not the essential character," of the Arroyo administration.

"Under this government, we have to assert and bitterly fight for our rights and freedoms in order to exercise and enjoy them, no matter that-or precisely because—the assertion of our rights and freedoms is met by the government with deliberate repression and unrestrained violence," Ocampo said.

"We owe it to our people to assert these rights and freedoms that are inalienably theirs, too. If the government applies brutal force, as it is wont to do, against our action [tomorrow], we will confront it with militant and dignified defiance," he said, adding:

"By our action (tomorrow), we will also give the DOJ and the PNP and, yes, Malacañang the chance to see the folly of their ways."

The Batasan 5 had taken refuge at the House since Feb. 27, after the DOJ linked them to the alleged Left-Right plot to overthrow Ms Arroyo.

Rule of law

In Helsinki, Finland, where he was one of the speakers at a conference on climate change, Senate Minority Leader Aquilino Pimentel Jr. expressed support for the five militant lawmakers.

"law enforcers are well-advised that we are operating under the rule of law. If they arrest the Batasan 5 despite Judge Delorino's [resolution] ... they should be cited for contempt and charged with illegal arrest," the senator said in a text message.

Pimentel also criticized the DOJ for including Honasan in the case that Delorino had dismissed.

"I think the DOJ is exhibiting its bullheadedness in harassing; people in order to deflect the issues on the fundamental wrongdoing of Gloria (Ms Arroyo)," he said in a phone call.

The Inquire earlier reported that the fugitive Honasan, leader of the failed coup attempts against the Aquino administration in the 1980s and a prime destabilization; suspect of the Arroyo administration, had gotten in touch with Pimentel to seek his help regarding the DOJ case against him.

Pimentel said he received four text messages from Honasan the other week requesting assistance! so that he would get "fair treatment" once he surfaced.

Honasan wanted to be sure that his rights would not be violated, the senator said.

The government has put up at P5-million reward for information leading to the capture of Honasan.

No surrender feelers

Pimentel said he was willing to extend legal aid to Honasan, particularly to ensure that the latter would get due process and that his rights as an accused would be protected.

He said Honasan's lawyer had phoned him to take exception to a headline of an Inquirer report, which said Honasan had sent surrender feelers.

"We did not send surrender feelers," Pimentel quoted the lawyer as saying.

He said the lawyer also told him: "We will appreciate your. continued support because apparently the DOJ does not recognize [Honasan's] rights."

Pimentel, however, said he was: not making an extra effort toreach Honasan.

"It might not be too wise to meet with him because I might put: him in jeopardy. If I arrange for ameeting with him, that could lead to his arrest," Pimentel said.

'Erap showed me his copy'-Gonzales

By Cynthia D. Balana

NATIONAL SECURITY ADVISER NORBERTO Gonzales yesterday said the administration was aware that former President Joseph Estrada had received information described in a US court as classified, and that the ousted leader even showed him some of the docu-

Gonzales claimed that Estrada was aware that the documents were official and classified but might not have known that their unauthorized use was punishable under US

Speaking in a radio interview, Gonzales recalled that Estrada showed him some of the US documents that Gonzales said he now believed had come from Filipino-American intelligence analyst Leandro Arag-

"That's true because when I visited him, he let me read documents from the Embassy of the United States," Gonzales said in Filipino.

"What I recall is that they appeared like analyses. What they (the Americans) were saying was that it appeared that there was a stalemate between the opposition and the Aragoncillo case and the alleged plot to over-down the government and the government was having difficulty because the opposition was too noisy."

Meeting of friends

Asked why Estrada allowed him to read the documents, Gonzales said the former President was his friend and they would exchange views on certain issues.

Also, Estrada might have been trying to show the extent of his sources, having been President, he said.

Gonzales said that, at first, he had no idea that the documents could have been coming from Aragoncillo.

Truth is coming out

He said the documents shown by Estrada did not have any accompanying cover, which is usually marked "top secret" or "classified."

He said the documents contained analyses, probably made by US representatives in the Philippines, of the political situation obtain-

Gonzales said his office investigated the government. The opposition couldn't bring throw the Arroyo administration and concluded that these were related and that Estrada was involved.

"It is good that the truth is coming out," Gonzales said. "Insofar as what is coming out of the Aragoncillo case is concerned, we don't need to be told that President Erap is among those who want to remove President Gloria."

All embassies snoop

"This Aragoncillo case is a blt serious," Gonzales said. "Regardless of the level of the information that is coming from America, especially if that is official information, if we use that, there are laws that deal with that, especially in America."

Asked if the classified information meant the United States was actively spying on the Philippines, Gonzales said there was nothing wrong with embassies doing analyses on their host countries.

"That's the work of all embassies in the Philippines," he said. "That is also the work of our embassies in foreign countries. It is important for us to understand what is happening in countries friendly to us and in countries

Recipients of Aragoncillo's e-mails and fax messages, such as Estrada, Lacson and San Juan Mayor JV Ejercito, have maintained the materials they received did not contain confidential information.

Ermita shared Nachura's sobering view.

"We can file rebellion charges but we don't have to base [them] on the documents Aragonciilo leaked from the FBI," Ermita said. "We already have a lot of documents here about their plans. That will be our basis and not documents from oth-

Nachura said that Aragoncillo's admission did not mean the government had a solid case against anti-Arroyo politicians.

"Aragoncillo may have pleaded guilty but that does not necessarily mean that his plea of guilt will bind others implicated in the case. It all depends on what crimes they will be charged with," Nachura said.

Not binding

Also charged in the US espionage case was former police superintendent and Lacson protégé Michael Rey Aquino, who was arrested last September.

Aquino, the alleged bridge between Aragoncillo and Ms Arroyo's political rivals, pleaded not guilty to charges of conspiracy and acting as an unregistered for-

Even those who are accused with Aragoncillo cannot be bound by his confession," Nachura said. "Just because one confessed to a group's crime does not necessarily mean that all of the members are

'Estrada on the ropes'

Nachura said his prudent stand on the issue was not caused by the rebuke the administration suffered at the hands of the Supreme Court on the issues involving Executive Order No. 464, the calibrated preemptive response policy and Proclamation No. 1017 declaring a state of national emer-

But Gonzalez saw matters differently.

In a telephone interview, the secretary said the Department of Justice was already working with foreign affairs officials to secure copies of the transcripts of Aragoncillo's testimony for possible use in a Philippine

"In boxing, when the boxer is groggy, he leans on the ropes. If this is boxing, [Estrada] is now leaning on the ropes," Gonzalez said, speaking from Boilo.

"They look damaging to me," Gonzalez said of Aragoncillo's statements. "He was quite clear that there was really a conspiracy among them."

The link is showing

Asked if Aragoncillo's admission could be ers in the filing of rebellion charges, Gonzalez answered in the affirmative.

"Based on the statements thus far, they are quite serious and the linkage is beginning to show," he said.

Asked if Aragoncillo's testimony would strengthen the administration case, Gonzalez said: "Yes ... with all of them and several other people involved in the destabilization."

"We can use that as evidence, but they remain hearsay at this point ... That's why we must get hold of the entire transcript. I asked our consulate there to secure the transcripts because these are all public documents."

'Don't blame me'

They are facing something serious which is of their own making," Gonzalez said. "So they have no one here to blame. They cannot Estrada is currently on trial for plunder before the Sandiganbayan.

Gonzalez said statements made under oath in foreign courts were admissible here as long as they were authenticated,

"It becomes admissible in court if you have the transcripts of the proceedings where the admission or confession was made and we can get an authenticated copy. You can introduce that as evidence,"

But he admitted this kind of evidence "is not as impeccable as somebody testifying in front of you."

Admissible in RP

According to Gonzalez, courts all over the world are now even allowing "trial by

In this particular case, they are charged with conspiracy involving public officials in this country. So basically, if the trial is in the US, the evidence is adduced there. So that is admissible as long as the transcript was authenticated. So the admission made there, which was definitely made under oath in an American court, has value here," he said

Hold your horses

Senate Minority Leader Aquilino Pimentel Jr. volunteered some advice to the administration: Hold your horses.

Reacting to Gonzalez's earlier statement that the administration could file rebellion charges against Estrada and the others, Pimentel said: "I doubt it very much because you have to show that Erap and Ping Lacson are engaged in a plot to overthrow Gloria." The sending of information is one thing and advocating the overthrow of the government is another. The connecting information has to surface first," said Pimentel, a lawyer.

Not fatal

"The mere act of sending the information and of Erap or Ping receiving it does not automatically translate into a violation of Philippine laws. Malaya pa yan sa bituka (That is still a long way from the gut)," Pimentel told the INQUIRER in a phone call from Helsinki, Finland, where he spoke at a forum on global warming and climate

"That is just in the mind of Raul Gonzalez,"

Pimentel added. Pimentel was to rendezvous today with Lacson, as well as Senate President Franklin Drilon, Sen. Richard Gordon and other senators who are in Kenya for the Inter-Parliamentary Union.

Lacson could not be contacted because he was en route to the IPU meeting.

Proof of conspiracy

Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye said the Aragoncillo case "speaks for itself." "It proves beyond doubt that (the) conspiracy to oust the President ... include(s) prominent public officials who have caused embarrassment to the country by their actions," he said. With a report from Juliet Labog-Javelon my arms."

At first, she said, "they would ask whether the scars were inborn or a result of burns."

"I can't lie about the scars, so I tell the interviewers everything," she recalled. "Then there would be a long pause, as though they were thinking hard. And then they tell me to just wait for their call."

No call ever came.

'Happiest thing'

Late last year, an Australian evangelical pastor whom Chris first met at the sanitarium heard about her situation—and offered her a job.

Chais has since been reporting to work three days a week as a secretary at the Mactan Christian Center, which pays her P220 a

That's the happiest thing that happened in my life. But it's also sad to realize that foreigners seem more educated about the nature of leprosy than Filipinos," she said

Chris' story captured the thrust of yesterday's celebration at Culion: Winning the battle against the "social stigma" attached to leprosy despite the fact that it's a curable, low-contagion disease.

It takes only a year of medication to treat the most severe types of leprosy.

Seven days after one has begun treatment, "it's no longer contagrous," explained Joy Ponterula, a PLMI program manager who accompanied Chris to Culion

Triumph of love

Regarded through most of its 100-year history as the "Island of the Living Dead" or "The island of No Return," Culion was as proudly dressed as any other Filipino town caught up in a fiesta frenzy. Today, Culion is leprosy-free but its samtarium and general hospital are still taking care of around 170 "custodial patients" who have been cured of leprosy but are either disabled or too old to go anywhere else. This once secluded community of medical exiles has literally consigned its painfu, past to a museum and has chosen to celebrate the triumph, of love and compassion.

The museum and archives on Culion's first few decades as a .eprosarium were unveiled, with dignitaries representing a major Japanese sponsor-the Sasakawa Memorial Health tion-among the honored guests

Flags and bunting adorned the streets and beach front. Public buildings were awash in fresh, coats of paint, and even a "tourism committee" armed with leaflets and a local story or two was on hand to assist members of the media.

Some of the former patients, who reportedly make up 70 to 80 percent of the current population of 20,000, staged a theatrical reenactment of the May 27, 1906, landing of the first batch of people afflicted with the disease

(The centennial celebration was held earlier to avoid inciement weather, organizers said.)

The tableau marked the emotional arriva, of Culion's first 365 patients, mostly from the Visayas, on board two Coast Guard vessels.

A year later, in 1907, the Segregation Law on Leprosy was enacted by the American colonial govermment

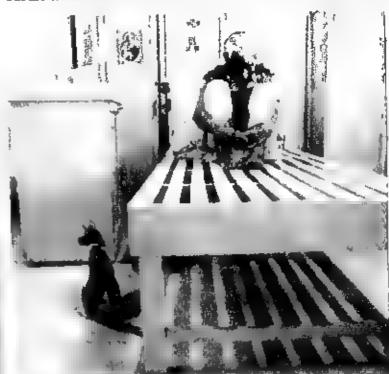

The law made it mandatory for leprosy patients to be rounded up, isolated, and shipped to Cukon

Dr. Art Cunanan, a Department of Health official who heads the Culion Leprosy Control and Rehabilitation Program, said the centennial, while replete with nostalgia over all the leprosy panents cured here, would rathen focus on the is.and's "transformation."

From being a declared lepen colony for about 75 years, Culion became a municipality in 1992

In 1998, the DOH declared that leprosy was no longer a pubhe health concern on the island

Ireland lets spouses of OFWs work

By Jerome Aning

IRELAND WILL ISSUE WORK PERMITS TO spouses of overseas Filipino workers employed in that country, according to Labor Secretary Patricia Sto. Tomas.

The new Insh immigration policy would reunite many Filipino families in Ireland, Sto. Tomas said yesterday.

Prior to the new arrangement, spouses of OFWs in Ireland-mostly husbands of Filpino nurses and caregivers-could not work in Ireland. This discouraged the OFWs from bringing their spouses and children there.

The new regulations followed weeks of negotiations between Philippine Embassy officials in London and Insh officials

The Philippine Embassy in London, which has jurisdiction over Ireland, initiated the talks during a consular outreach program in Dubhn, the Irish capital, last March.

Ire,and would also allow some 2,000 Fil-.p.no caregivers to undergo hospital training as nurses, Sto. Tomas said

The Insh government came up a new procedure where foreign health care workers, particularly caregivers, if found qualified by the Irish Nursing Board, would be allowed to undergo an adaptation program for nursing in a training hospita.

Sto. Tomas said the new scheme would benefit about 2,000 Filipino caregivers in Insh nursing homes who had been classified as under board nurses in Ireland

The labor secretary said the new Irish immigration and employment policies were milestones in the efforts of the Philippine Embassy in London to promote the welfare of OFWs and their families in Ireland

She akewise conveyed gratitude to the Insh government for extending employment opportunities to OFWs

"We in the labor department express our deep appreciation of the Irish government and the Filipino officials in London for their active involvement in promoting and safeguarding the rights and we fare of the OFWs in Ireland," Sto. Tomas said in a statement.

Last rites for late Unilab chief set

THE REMAINS OF JOSE YAO CAMPOS, founder and chair ementus of United Laboratories Inc. (Unitab), the Unitab Group of Compames and Greenfield Group of Companies, will be cremated on May 8 after 1 p.m. Mass at Santuario de San Antonio in Forbes Park, Makati City. He passed away on May 1 at the age of 84.

He is survived by his wife Beatrice; children Joy, Butch and Olite, Jeffrey and Elizabeth, and grandchildren Clinton and Jacqueline, Chrissy, Mikey, Jeanette, Jaclyn and Luke, Jay, Janelle, Jamie and Niña.

After the end of World War II in 1945, Campos opened a small drugstore in war-ravaged Mamla with the avowed aim of providing "quality medicines at prices within reach of as many people as possible in the community." According to Unitab, Campos thought it would have been "unreasonable and coarse to sell medicines at prices determined by pure business objectives alone to sick people whose livelihood had been lost in the war."

The drugstore quickly developed into a pharmaceutical company. In the late 1950s, despite having to contend with multinational corporations, Unilab became one of the top pharmaceutical companies in the country. It has retained its compentive position up to

In 2003, Unilab was the 35th top corporation in the Philippines, according to the Secu-Lities and Exchange Commission. The following year, it ranked 37th with sales of more than P17 billion.

Unilab has extended its reach outside the Philippines. It is a provider of health care products in Indonesia, Thailand, Malaysia, Singapore, Hong Kong and Vietnam.

While Campos devoted considerable attention to Unilab, he also invested in other industries like processed food, mass transportation PDI Research and real estate.

Pigs in Canada

PPARENTLY, PIGS IN CANADA DINE WITH SPOON and fork. That, at least, is what the principal of a school in Montreal seems to suggest, after describing the "table behavior" of a 7-year-old Filipmo boy newly immigrated to Canada in the following educational terms. "If your son eats like a pig, he has to go to another table because this is the way we do it and how we're going to do it every time."

That, word for word, is what the EDITORIALS principal of Ecole Lalande, identified by a Montreal newspaper as Normand Bergeron, told the boy's mother over the phone, after she called to complain.

The object of her complaint was the repeated decision by her son's "lunch monitor" to punish the boy for eating with a spoon and fork. According to the newspaper report, which named the boy and his mother and even carried their photograph, the supervising teacher ordered the boy "more than 10 times this year" to eat at a table by himself, whenever he are with a spoon and fork, instead of with a fork alone.

Matters came to a head when the boy finally told his mother on April 11: "Mommy, I don't want to eat anymore. My teacher is telling me that eating with a spoon and fork is yucky and disgusting." When the mother complained to the principal, Bergeron defended the teacher's decisions and then of course unburdened himself of that choice, character-forming simile. "Your son eats like a pig." (What is education, after all, but character formation?) The mother also quoted Bergeron as saying, "Madame, you are in Canada. Here in Canada, you should eat the way Canadians eat."

The principal has a point, of course, about the need to adapt to the requirements of a larger culture, but he misses the larger point: Canada is celebrated for its multicultural diversity, its hospitality to various cultures. Ostracizing a 7-year-old for his eating habits-shared by countless Filipino families-runs counter to Canada's own heritage.

Bergeron's unseemly conduct is based on assumptions, about culture and immigration, that can only be de-

We are glad to note that the Philippine Embassy in Canada has supported the boy's mother in her complaint filed with the local school board. "The embassy considers this an affront to Philippine culture and continues to vigorously support any action that will validate a conclusion of racial discrimination," Department of Foreign Affairs spokesperson Gilbert Asuque said the other day.

We are even more glad that a Canadian non-government organization dedicated to helping victims of discrimination, the Center for Research Action on Race Relations, has also filed a second complaint, seeking moral damages from the lunch monitor. That, we believe, is in keeping with the best Canadian tradition of putting your money where your mouth is.

Angels of Pinatubo

GROUP OF VOLUNTEERS HAS SPENT THE LAST several years doing humanitarian work involving the Aetas of Mt. Pinatubo. "We work from the shadows," the self-effacing Jennifer Wallum said the other day, by way of explaining what the Entrepreneurs Volunteers Assistance Charity Foundation has done and continues to do.

The group sources donations from the country and from around the world, as well as engages in what is called social marketing (for instance, seiling bags with silkscreened Pinatubo moufs), in order to help Aeta communities. In particular, the group has helped fund Traditional Tribal Origins Ethnic Education Schools (cheekily called Toes), which allow Aetas to learn in educational settings that integrate traditional Aeta beliefs and knowledge.

"We are rarely seen in the communities," Wallum said. "If we are always appearing there, it is disruptive to the culture."

The number of Toes has grown over the years, a clear sign of both the volunteers' determination and the tenacity of the Aeta people. Today, there are eight in Bataan, four in Pampanga, 12 in Tarlac and six in Zambales.

"Although they want to conserve their culture," Wallum said, "at the same time [their openness to learning] means that they can have extra knowledge so that they can survive better in the new world."

Hope is one step, one toehold, at a time.

Summa cum laude

SUMMA CUM LAUDE FOR THE SUPREME Court for its splendid decision striking down Presidential Proclamation 1017. It was an abhorrent measure that deserved the indignation of the highest tribunal as the conscience of the government. The Court has proved to be the bastion of the rule of law that Ms Arroyo had callously violated. The justices have shown beyond peradventure that they are the ultimate protectors of the Constitution that those in power are wont to ignore and tra-

I have not yet read the decision in full but I am thrilled enough by the reports in the Is-QUIRER of the essential rulings of the landmark case. The proclamation was roundly rejected as an open and blatant defiance of the paramount law as the guardian of the rights of the people in the democratic society. The Supreme Court has assured the nation, in language that cannot be misunderstood even by those who are none so blind as those who will not see that Proclamation No. 1017 was arrant tyranny

The ponencia is a fitting reprimand for President Macapagal-Asroyo who, as the chief enforcer of the law, has been exposed to be its chief violator. The justices may not have said so directly out of respect for her exalted office, but their meaning was pungently clear. In usuing and enforcing the challenged proclamation, she had willfully violated the Bill of Rights and the nature of republican government. She had attempted but failed, thanks to a vigilant Supreme Court, to impose another dictatorship on this

I must confess—and I do so joyously

now that I had apprehensions about how the Supreme Court would decide the controversial case. Like many other citizens, I was worried that the justices, who had all but two been appointed by President Arroyo, might be moved by utang na loob in ruling for her and not against the proclamation. I thank God that I was mistaken. It swells the beart that a clear majority of the Court, following their knowledge of the law and the biddings of their conscience, voted to declare Proclamation No. 1017 unconstitutional

Our history would not have been seriously blemished during the time of Ferdinand Marcos if the Supreme Court then had summoned the courage to stop him when he declared martial law in 1972 and started to impose eventual despotism with his avaricious arrogation of power (and public funds) This is secondguessing now, but I like to think that the dictator could have been stupped on his tracks if the spineless justices then had shown the courage exhibited by the members of the present Supreme Court.

The SCRA is full of the shameful cases exhibiting the cowardice of the justices of the Supreme Court in justifying every act of Marcos that unquestionably (except in the minds of his flunkies on the highest tribunal) violated the Constitution and the liberties of the people. The Constitution of 1973 was ratified like a barangay ordinance, suspected enemies of the regime were picked up and murdered; private properties were confiscated for private gain; civil liberties were violated; Ninoy Aquino was assassinated; Congress was replaced with a rubber-stamp Batasang Pambansa; and Amendment No. 6 insulated the despot from rightful accountability and retributton. All these and more were "legitimized" by a craven and covetous Supreme Court that remains the blackest disgrace in the annais of our judiciary.

Not so the present Supreme Court. This is the tribunal that only recently annulled Executive Order No. 464 for impinging on the inherent and express power of Congress to conduct inquiries in aid of legislation, ruled against government strictures against freedom of speech and the right of peaceful assembly, and last Wednesday checked another would-be dictator by annulling her Proclamation No. 1017 as an obvious attempt to place the Philippines under a new but no less vicious despotism.

"I like to think grandly of the Supreme Court justices now as like the great Lord Coke of England who, in answer to the intimidations and importuning of his monarch, intoned the ringing words that have since become the motto of all just courts: "I will do what becomes me as a judge."

I have been critical of it on many occasions, but now I sincerely and proudly say "All honor to the Supreme Court of the Phihppines!" The judicial robes become the justices like habiliments of courage and wisdom.

Good shepherds!?

THE STORY IS TOLD ABOUT A CHILD WHO asked his father, "Dad, is it true that in China, a man does not know his wife until the day he

"That is true in every country, sun," the father replied with a sigh.

In today's Gospel, the Lord calls Himself the Good Shepherd who not only knows His sheep, but also lays down His life for His sheep, Let us ask ourselves today, what sort of shepherds we are. Are we shepherds who have real concern for our sheep, or, are we shepherds who just work for pay?

How consoling to know that the Lord knows and is concerned about each one of us. In this world of materialism and consumerism, how assuring to know that we are not just a number or a disposable commodity. People who tend to mislead, misinform, manipulate, use and abuse other people for their personal agenda need to listen and learn from the Good Shepherd, for whom every person is worth "stopping" and dying for

Last May 2, I said a Mass for children who have cancer, "Brave Kids" we call them, who at an early and tender age have to go through chemotherapy and all the pain, discomforts and loneliness that accompany cancer. I would like to salute Paul and Sigrid Perez, and many other parents of cancerstricken children who stay with their sheep and continue to pray, hope and grow with their children. They are brave parents, good shepherds. Most touching was when the kids let go of their white balloons with a sincere wish and prayer for healing-and for normal lives without much anguish and Franke and Ireneo Batoon had opted to stay with their flock who took shelter at the Bangued Cathedral. They helped the wounded and led them in prayer till the end. We remember them in gratifude, and the many countless good shepherds we have mer in life. A far cry from the many noisy people roday who ciaim to be shepherds, but who in reality are wolves out to devour the sheep.

An eyewitness to the March 10, 1945 bombing of Bangued, Abra was former Pangasinan Gov. Rafael Colet who was then 9 years old. He related how the whole town was in disarray after the bombing ended. Prom the fields, he rushed to their home and, in tears, looked and dug into the debris, hoping to find his mother. Hours later, he was reunited with his mother, and what a reunion it was. The reason I am mentioning this is to remind parents to never, never underestimate their precious presence in their children's lives. For that matter, all people who have big shepherding responsibilities must never take for granted or take lightly the importance of their role as shepherds.

Today, Good Shepherd Sunday, may we also remind those in the government, military and police that as shepherds, they are supposed to protect and not pounce on the little ones of our society. They have been given the power precisely to serve the people, not to abuse or deprive them. Time will tell and time will surely reveal who the servants of the people really are. Time will also tell who of our so-called public servants are real public servants. Yes, truth, no matter how people hide it, will surely come out in the end.

We would like to thank all those who helped in the "Dinner for a Cause"-held last April 8, 2006 to help restore the castle in Christ the King Seminary-where we, priests, served as waiters. No blg deal really because by virtue of our ordination, we are called to be servers, waiters and servants, not only in words, but especially in deeds.

Don't forget, May 14 is Mother's Day. Let us remember, in a special way, all morhers who are natural shepherds, gifted by God with a heart that knows how to give and how to sacrifice. Yes, a mother's heart is that which is closest to God's heart, God bless and reward all

The month of May is the month of Mary, our Mother. We ask her most powerful intercession for our families, our country and the whole world. Just as we gave her floral offerings every afternoon of this month when we were children, may we continue to give hearts to her-hearts that are open to sharmg, forgiveness and love.

What is it that you can offer to your mother? What is it that she asks of you?

We take time today to remember our par ents, our shepherds who have been there for us all these years. I received this text message Let us enjoy our parents while they are still with us, while we still can see, hold and em brace them, and while they still can celebrate with us; let's lavish them with love because they labored hard for the things we enjoy now let's talk to them now, visit them now and was not for the time when they hear us no mon and we have to make our visits before then tombstones."

A moment with the Lord: Lord, you are our Good Shepherd. Help us t be good shepherds to others, too. Amen.

CONTRACTOR OF THE PARTY OF THE PARTY OF The POC and Philippine basketball

ONE MONTH AGO, THE SPORTS SECTIONS OF the major newspapers in town were full of photos of Philippine Olympic Committee (POC) officials smiling broadly as they were being greeted by International Olympic Committee (IOC) president Lacques Rogge in Seoul, South Korea. The offi-cials—POC president Jose Cojuangco, first vice president Monico Puentevella, and representa-tives of four major cage stakeholders—were in Korea to brief Federacion Internationale de Basketball (Fiba) secretary general Patrick Baumann on the progress of initiatives aimed at lifting the country's suspension from Fiba- and IOC-sponsored international basketball competitions. The officials also met incoming Fiba president Bob Elphinston of Australia

Unfortunately, behind the happy faces and social amenities, what they got from Baumann was a blunt statement telling them that the fastest way to get Philippine basketball back on track was for the group to urge Joey Lina, Basketball Association of the Philippines (BAP) president, to rejoin the group of basketball stakeholders and sign on for the new basketball body, Pilipinas Basketbal.

June last year, the POC voted to expel the BAP for various reasons. Some were valid, some were inaccurate, possibly ill-motivated. Whatever was the real reason, the POC failed to take into account the legal repercussions of their action vis-àvis Fiba-sponsored basketball events. The POC probably thought that after expelling the BAP and setting up a new organization, the Philippine Basketball Federation Inc. (PBFI), Fibe would automatically accept the new group. This did not happen. In fact, as a result of the POC action, Fiba suspended the Philippines from participating in hall Piba-sponsored tournaments. That was the reason why basketball could not be included in the Southeast Asian Games held in Manila in De-

A POC delegation headed by Cojuangco left for Geneva in September to try to get a reversal of the Fiba decision. The mission failed, instead the delegation came home with a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) which, in an open letter, called "on all our basketball-loving countrymen to swallow the bitter pill now with us for the virtue of long-term gains." The MOU was described by the POC as the "one big break we all had been waiting for." Well, we swallowed the bitter pill of not being able to host the basketball event in the SEA Games but, so far, there has been no long-term gain from such a sacrifice. The Just to refresh our memories; Sometime in deadline for that memorandum of understanding was March 31 this year. The day has come and gone, but we are no closer to having the suspen-

What we see are people ganging up on Lina as though he was the culprit in this mess. Remember that it was the POC that expelled the BAP, and now it is in a bind because it needs Lina's signature to get Fiba accreditation. But why should Line sign on at the expense of the organization of

This is no brief for Lina and the BAP As I said earlier, some of the criticism leveled against the BAP are valid. But I don't like the idea of pressuring one man and picturing him as the stumbling block in our efforts to solve our basketball problems. The last thing we need is a scapegoat, or someone on whom to pin the blame for a situation created by others.

But even if Lina signed on for the new organization, the road would still be long and redious for Philippone basketball. This is so because, as clarified by Piba Secretary General Baumann, Piba would have to expel the BAP before accepting its replacement—a move Piba clearly does not relish because "it would set a bad precedent in the world basketball community."

To my mind, the best solution to our problem is really quite simple. Reinstate BAP in the family of our sports associations. Can this happen? Not under the present POC leadership. There is too much pride and amor propio involved and, unfortunately, it is the country that suffers. We continue to be a pariah in the international basketball community—an outcast, a leper—all because our sports officials are too self-centered and fail to consider the interests of the nation. We are probably out of the coming Asian Games in Doha as far as basketball is concerned, and we will face this same situation in other Piba and IOC-approved cage events.

As I mentioned in an earlier column, I am no baskethall fanatic. My sport of choice is golf. But this is not really about basketball. This is all about national pride and dignity, and the sooner we get our act together, the better it will be for the country and the millions of Filipino basketball enthustasts who love this particular sport. For heaven's sake, we are the best in Southeast Asia when it comes to basketball. It is difficult to understand how and why we got into a situation which bars us from international cage competitions. if the current crop of sports leaders cannot solve the problem of Philippine basketball, perhaps, it is time for them to consider stepping aside and giving others an opportunity to put an end to this shameful state of affairs.

Laughing all the way home

I WAS IN MY FRESHMAN YEAR WHEN I FIRST ATTENDED a theater class under Prof. Amiel Leonardia. As my academic future is no longer dependent on the benevolence of his professorial pen, I am now at liberty to describe the gentleman who-in my bend at least—is a curious mix of Mr. Miyagi (of "Karate Kid" fame), Sean Connery and God.

The first time I made his acquaintance, he was delivering a discourse on get-

REBEL passing the appropriate requirements, WITHOUT and turning off cell phones. Failure to A CLUE do these musts would lead to dire Patricia consequences, he Evangelista warned. He was interrupted by the ringing of a cell phone-mine. I had every intention of denying ownership of the errant gadget. In fact, I looked as astounded as everyone else, and was working my way up to looking insulted when Sir Amiel zeroed in on a guy sitting beside me. Alas, my much-neglected conscience chose that moment to make its presence known. I raised a hand, "It was mine, sir."

Sir Amiel (as we call him) stretched out a hand. I looked at it. "Your cell phone," he commanded, sounding the way God probably did when he issued the Ten Commandments on top of Mount Sinai. "Pick it up from me at one o'clock."

The next time the class met, a message alert tone echoed loudly midway through the lecture. Confident that at least mine was on silent mode, I looked around smugly for the poor unlucky dolt. Front and center of the room was Sir Amiel, guiltily grabbing for his cell phone. "My wife," he told us. He caught the look of giee on my face. He offered his cell phone. "Miss Evangelista, would you like to confiscate my cell phone?"

I smiled benevolently. "I promise to return it at one

The other night was the 7 p.m. gala of "Ang Birheng Matimtiman," Dulaang UP's version of Niccoln Machiavelli's "Mandragola." It was directed by Amiel Leonardia Earlier, at 6:15 p.m. that same day, I was standing on the aisle of an MRT coach racing north, holding on for dear life to a metal handrail and trying to glare at a little boy who-with his Mighty Mouse backpack—was occupying far more than his fair share of the blue plastic bench. Failing that, I concentrated my efforts on willing the tram to go faster. I had horrific visions of making it to the theater at 7:01, in time to see Sir Amiel shaking his head at me and locking down the the-It will naturally be obvious that this writer is biased. This is not a review; this is written in appreciation of two hours of sheer, unadulterated enjoyment. "Matimtiman" is a comedy, which, by definition, is simply a story with a happy ending. The comic hero is Juanito Tenorio, (Romnick Sarmenta), a wealthy young bohemian fresh from Paris who falls for the grace and loveliness of Clarita Matimiman. The saintly beauty is married to Candido Matimuman a k a. Mang Dido (Jovy Peregrino), a rich fool with illusions of intelligence. Enter Goryo, con man extraordinaire (Lex Marcos), whose plotting has Tenorio pretending to be a doctor, spouting Latin and promising the childless Mang Dido a much longed-for son. All that must be done, according to Tenorio, is to compel the virtuous Clarita to drink the Mandragola. The medicine has an unfortunate side effect, however, for the first man to sleep with Clarita will die an immediate death. The solution (which the plotters claim was exercised by the entire French royal family) is to find a random young man to sleep with Clarita end thus take on the poison. Once this is done, Mang Dido was permitted to happily sleep with his wife and produce Dido the Second. The plotters are abetted by an enterprising parish priest (Fonz Deza), Nanang Bireng, Clarita's grandchild-hungry mother (Marivic Abalos) and Uban, Tenorio's faithful servant (Sha-

The humor is so unashamedly uniquely Pinoy, it's sometimes difficult to remember that the play was written for the 1500s by an Italian political philosopher. I mean, sure, dangling earrings and Victorian brooches may be a little hard to swallow when it comes to 19th-century fashion but, hey, I'm willing to believe anything. The play's success owes much to Jerry Respeto's hilarious translation, that has Uban (whose wild antics as storyteller cracks up the audience repeatedly) apologizing to the audience in case they might find themselves slightly less intelligent than when they entered the

Deza is properly corrupt, entertainingly lecherous-and, frankly, he looks exactly the way a crooked 19th-century parish priest should look. Marcos plays con man Goryo with an artlessness that makes it ridiculously simple to believe Goryo is doing everything out of the goodness of his heart, I can see why Sarmenta used to be a teenage heartthrob-he has a smile, I must admit, that had my heart going "putypat." I'm guessing it's the good looks and stereotypical roles he used to play that make it easy to overlook that he's in fact an incredibly talented actor. Every other character in the play, however, pales in comparison to Clarita's fool of a husband. Tenorio may be the hero, but it is Peregrino who steals the show. His Mang Dido is the perfect fool: pompous, gullible and prone to mental lapses and nonsensical blabbering. The stage is his whenever he toddles into the plaza, coattail flapping and tongue hanging out. Some will argue that the acting can sometimes be slapstick, but Peregrino makes every gesture so inherently part of his character that it is impossible to imagine any other way of playing Mang Dido. The play is worth watching if only to see this theater veteran strut and stagger across the stage like a self-important rooster.

Machiavelli is best known for his philosophy of the end justifying the means. As the parish priest said in the play, "In all things, one must look to the result."

I'm told its harder to make people laugh than cry-this play has the audience laughing at the rate of one cackle a minute. Whatever the means Prof. Amiel Leonardia may have utilized in the production of this play-there are rumors that theater actors are kept chained in the basement at night to make sure they come to rehearsals on time-they are certainly justified by "Ang Birheng Matim-

The night we watched it, everyone was leaving the theater smiling, humming tunes and rubbing their jaws which were aching because they had laughed too loudly and too often. Adding to the genial atmosphere were the cast members at the lobby, most prominently Eula Valdes in full Zsazsa costume who gamely nigned autographs and posed for cell phonebearing fans, and Wilma Doesn't who was hawking merchandise like CDs and twirling light batons that she and other "Amazonistas

To watch "Zsazsa" is to be immersed in an entire theater experience, including basking in the air of shared empowerment among the aunot all of whom were gay, by the way. It is also to be a witness to the confident staging of material that is at once current and accessible, but also meaningful and emotionally resonant.

DIRECTOR Chris Millado places "Zsazsa" under the heading of "camp," explaining not just the material, adapted from the graphic novel by Chris Martinez with music by Vincent de Jesus, but also Saying something is "camp," is too often conveniently used to excuse excess, lack of discipline, shoddy handling and general mediocrity. But in "Zsazsa's" case, "camp" is an apt description, a way to look at the over-the-top goings-on onstage.

As Millado writes in his "idions's Guide to 'Camp'," which serves as his director's notes, "Gogogagahan...ang maaaring kapahamakan o togumpay ng camp. Pahamak laing mahulog sa bulgar at bastas. Togumpay laung gawing maskara ang 'gaga-gagahan' upang lumukha ng kahulugan. Dahil sa katangian ng 'camp' na patingkarin ang mga katangiang-sekswal at pisikal ay nagagamit din ito upang ipaliwanag na ang gender or kasarian ay maaring isang palabas lamang. Dito rumarampa sa larungang pulitikal ang 'camp' (Absurdity [Millado translates it to meaninglessness]...may be camp's downfall or triumph. It may lead to its downfall if it descends into the vulgar and tasteless. Triumph if absurdicy is used as a mask to create meaning. Because of camp's ability to highlight sexuality and physicality, it can also be used to demonstrate how gender may in fact be artifice. Here is where camp is Tuxos Rutaquio as Ada is rightly low-key and retiring, and thus he gets upstaged time and again by Joey Paras as Didi, Ada's friend and Zsazsa's sidekick, who is really the sparkplug of the entire production. The role of Didi was created by the amazingly talented Ricci Chan (who first essayed the role of Angel in the local staging of "Rent") and I couldn't help wondering how he would have approached the voluble busybody Didi. Paras, a singer and performer, turns in an outrageous performance, but I thought Didi could have used some perkiness and sweetness.

The real stars of the show, though, are the direction and production, which employ clever touches, such as the use of miniature human figures to set off the "giant" toad, in place of technological marvels. The songs by De Jesus are moving and affecting, and when Ada "gets her man," the moment is tinged with sweetness and vindication. The puny human gets one over the super alter ego.

The rest is up to us

I AM VERY PLEASED WITH THE SUPREME 'Court's decision on Presidential Proclamation 1017. On hearing the first cryptic reports on radio, I thought this was another one of those win-win verdicts that try to please everyone. It is not. The Court has struck a blow for liberty and democracy.

As one of the lead peritioners against 1017, I had a personal interest in the outcome of this case. The Court categorically ruled that the police who (arrested me without a warrant during a peaceful rally on Edsa last Feb. 24th violated my constitutional rights. I was hoping the Supreme Court deciston would put an end to my troubles with the police. But now President Macapagul-Arroyo's subalterns are saying that I and Akbayan president Ronald Llamas were arrested not under 1017 but under BP 880. I'm afraid that if BP 880 doesn't stick, my next citation would be for rebellion. That is what they are using to immobilize the old warrior Crispin Beltran.

I first heard of 1017 from one of the plainclothes policemen who arrested me. Unable to produce a warrant when I asked for one, he blurted out the magic number: 1017. I asked him what it meant. He could not answer, but he gave me its title: "State of National Emergency." It was all that the police seemed to need to Justify doing what they thought was no cessary to carry out their orders. In Camp Karingal where I was taken, I asked the police colonel who was in charge if he had read 1017. He also said no. But he was at least curlous to know what it contained. One of my lawyers lent him a copy, I doubt very much, however, if a close reading of 1017 would have helped him. His superiors-Director General Arturo Lomibao, Director VIdal Querol and Chief Supe. Nicasio Radovan-were already acting as if martial law was in effect. They thought 1017 freed them from all k-gal restraints. We might perhaps forgive their momentary intextcation. After all, their equally militaristic civilian superiors in Malacañang were telling media that day that warrantless arrests and searches, dispersal of all rallies, takeover of privately owned public utalities, etc. were permitted during the emergency.

If 1017 was textually vague, the orders were not. The cruz of the problem, as the high court sees it, is that the powers that Malacañang sought to exercise under 1017 exceeded the constitutional prerogatives that were being invoked. The lawyers who drafted the prociamation might have misled the ponce, but the more alkely reason for the lack of fit between the objective sought and the instrument chosen is that Malacanang wanted to avoid congressional review. That is why it fell short of suspending the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus or declaring margal law.

In 1017, Ms Arroyo does two things basically. Pirst, she calls on the armed forces to suppress lawless violence. Second, she declares a state of national emergency. Are these constitutional?

The Court rules that calling out the armed forces to suppress lawiess violence when necessary is a prerogative of the President under the Constitution. Therefore, 1017 is a valid exercise of this power. But, the Court also says that 1017 stretches this power when it calls on the armed forces "to enforce obedience to all the laws and to all decrees, orders and regulations promulgated by me personally or upon my direction." The President cannot direct the armed forces to "enforce obedience to all laws, even those not related to lawless violence * Furthermore, the President cannot talk about promulgating decrees because under the 1987 Constitution, the President does not have this power, not even under martial law.

PP 1017 declares a state of national emergency. But what does it do? Does it confer emergency powers on the President? The Supreme Court concedes that, in the absence of any explicit provision to the contrary, the President "could validly declare the existence of a state of national emergency even in the absence of a congressional enactment." However, the Court emphatically states that "the exercise of emergency powers, such as the taking over of privately-owned public utility or business affected with public interest... requires a delegation from Congress." Ms Arroyo and her subordinates were operating under the wrong notion that the President could exercise such powers without congressional authority.

The commander-in-chief powers of the President are awesome. The framers of our Constitution intended them to be used with restraint and only for the purpose of ensuring public safety. They were not meant to be used to stifle dissent, or to silence the critics of government. Safeguards are in place to prevent the abuse of these powers. But not even the most detailed Constitution can be protected from those who exploit its gaps and loopholes to carry out a political agenda.

"Words are deeds," says Wittgenstein. We flatter with words, we threaten with words, we deceive with words. Removed from its practical context, the text of Proclamation 1017 may mean nothing. But viewed in the light of the events and interests in which it makes its appearance, its insidious design becomes clear.

1017 is out from the same cloth as EO 464 and CPR. It is as cleverly crafted as Ms Arroyo's "I-amsorry" speech. It aims for maximum political effect at minimum legal risk. A friendly court could have easily upheld it, and laid the blame for its excesses on the enforcers. But the Panganiban Court saw in 1017 a dangerous subterfuge advancing stealthlly under the cover of legality. The Supreme Court has struck it down. The rest is up

TALK of the TOWN

7 myths of terrorism

HE PHILIPPINES HAS SUFFERED PROM TERRORIST ATTACKS BY THE BANdit group Abu Sayyaf and the al-Qaida-linked Jemaah Islamiyah (JI), a group seeking to create an Islamic state in Southeast Asia.

Those staged by the Abu Sayyaf include the explosion inside a ship in Manila Bay that killed 116 people on Feb. 27, 2004, and the bombing of a bus in Makati and of crowded places in General Santos and Davao City on Feb. 14, 2005 that left at least seven dead and some 150 wounded.

JI was behind the explosion on Aug. 1, 2000 at the Jakarta residence of the Philippine ambassador to Indonesia and the Rizal Day bombings in Metro Manila, also in 2000. (See JI attacks.)

Although a number of leaders of the Abu Sayyaf and JI have been captured or killed, the terrorism.

two groups remain a threat because they have been able to replenish their ranks. The recruits were trained at terror camps in Mindanao.

It is said that graduates of these camps rival in number the Southeast Asians who trained in Afghanistan under al-Qaida. The graduates of the Mindanao camps are believed to have taken part in every JI-linked bombings since 2000, including the attack in Bali in 2002.

JI has 100 foreign militants hiding in Mindanao alone, according to the Singaporebased International Center for Political Violence and Terrorism Research. They have trained 400 to 500 fighters for new attacks Fighting JI, the Abu Sayyaf and similar groups will require exploding the myths of terrorism.

Threats and the way forward

Y IDEAS ON TERRORISM COME FROM EXPERIENCE—I'VE LIVED in Southeast Asia for more than two decades, most of that reporting for CNN. I could not have come to these views if I hadn't been at every bombing attack, at every riot. I was there at the first attacks of the Jemaah Islamiyah (JI) in Indonesia. I met many of its leaders. I lived through it. That's my foundation and the reason I became obsessed with this topic.

I would argue that if 9/11 hadn't happened, we would've been in for a far more catastrophic attack because the network, which was exposed then, would have been left in peace to continue to plot. Sept. 11 ripped off a veneer—one of seven myths! want to discuss—a collective be in the West built during the post-Cold war peace. That exposed what had been going on beneath the surface worldwide: how the growth of radical Islam had been hijacked and fuelled by groups like al-Qaida to build a global terrorist network. How? By co-opting homegrown groups, which have their own local agendas, but hijacking them uso a global jihad.

The goal is simple: ai-Qaida was after global domination, using religion as a tool. If you look at a bottom up, the groups wanted to topple their own governments, get control of their lands, set up Islamic shorio law, then stitch all these cells together to create one giant islamic Caliphate.

Years before 9/11, Pakistan's former Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto told me, "Osama bin Laden was able to tap different youths in different regions on different issues by pegging it all as a war between Islam and the West, but in fact, he was damaging the regional conflicts for his own agenda."

In Southeast Asia, Jemaah Islamiyah, al-Qaida's regional arm, successfully infibrated local conflicts and co-opted groups in Indonesia, the Philippines, Malaysia, Singapore, and Thailand.

That is linked to the FIRST myth I run into un nearly every country I reported from: Borders and nations can contain conflicts their way.

The implicit attitude is these are our conflicts. Leave us alone to deal with them. The Association of Southeast Asian Nations has even institutionalized that idea into something it calls constructive engagement. All conflicts are local and can be dealt with domestically. Wrong, Because what we're seeing is that when you're talking about conflicts involving Muslim issues, there are no local conflicts.

I mentioned the SECOND myth: The post-Cold war view of peace—with one superpower, there is no more enemy.

Until 2002, the Philippines and the United States had defense structures set-up for a post-Cold war scenario—all faise as 9/11 proved. Under the calm surface, there was an enemy cobbling together an infrastructure. In the months and years after that, I saw countries redefine security issues and strategies of warfare.

Once that became clear, other factors became unportant—trashing the THRD myth—that military victory need not take into account culture and language ... because now language and culture have become weapons in an ideological campaign.

For the first time—members of the military and defense analysts are seeing that understanding culture is now as important as the factics of war. A July US Marine Corps report states "we should anticipate the spread of violent jihadist methods to non-Muslim areas and the "weaportization of culture" against us in long but ambiguous campaigns that target the domestic population and our will."

There is now a growing understanding that this is not just a military campaign, that there is an ideological battle, that no one dominant culture or power can dictate the terms and that it's necessary to understand not just cultures and perspectives but also languages.

but also languages.

Working with CNN and traveling extensively in the region gave me a unique view; I was able to help contacts circumvent very tanwieldy and ill-defined bureaucracies. Two years after 9/1 I, it was still difficult to even confirm information from one country to another My contacts would call, and I could get an answer to them immediately. Some questions were simple; for example, one Filipino intel official wanted the background on an Indonessan group few outside of Sulawesi had even heard of. Another time, an Indonessan didn't have enough load in his cellphone to make a call to Malaysia so he called my local number.

That exposed a POURTH myth: Pacts exist and are shared equally. That simply isn't true, information, depending on who has it, can inevitably be skewed to benefit the vested interests of at holder.

The agents on the ground came to me with information because they needed help, and as they pieced together more and more of the puzzle, others came because they were frustrated by the way the information was being handled or misrepresented within their bureaucracies. Still others were afraid of macron.

Initially, I was surprised by the level of official demal—despite the knowledge on the ground. The trend is that denial lasts until a major astack—in the United States, in Indonesia, in the Philippines. But the costs are high for denial—it misleads the people and leaves Muslims vulnerable to radical ideology. This is part of the reason many Muslims still believe Osama bin Laden is a hero.

After denial, I began to see misrepresentation, largely because of vested interests—like the time one Filipino official admitted that they had discovered training camps in Mindanao, but that they didn't want the United States to know so they hid the pictures. You get the idea: everyone wants to use and interpret the information they get based on their vested interests. And that often clouds the judgment of the information.

That is part of the reason the United States is paying little attention to the upsurge of sectarian violence in Southeast Asia, failing to see the link between these local conflicts and the global jihad. The violence in the Matidox and Sulawesi in Indonesia, the southern Philippines, and perhaps southern Thailand ... all these should be cause for alarm. But it's not just the US turning a blind eye. Many of our own governments refuse to see the interconnections because admitting those links mean redefining our world views and searching for a different strategy.

Than's linked to the FIFTH myth: There is only one version of reality. Different backgrounds and cultural lenses give different realities. The reality is that in our world today, no one version of reality can dominate.

That brings us to the SIXTH myth: They are topdown, monolithic entities, hierarchical rather than networked.

Jemaah islamyah or JI provides a good case study of how normonolithic, bottom-up and free flowing these organizations are—and how heavily dependent they are on personal connections.

In Indonesia, which has the world's largest Muslim population, as of mid last year, about 270 Jl suspects had been arrested since 9/11. About 140 were convicted and sentenced. Yet, more recruits continue to replenish the bench and transnational connections continue to flourish.

A reached out from Indonesia and radicalized the Abu Sayyaf in the Philippines, regenerating the group of lockrappers into a full-fledged terrorist organization. The Abu Sayyaf carried out the world's worst maritime terrorist anack in February 2004—the bombing of a SuperFerry in Manila Bay that killed 116 people.

But there are also internal conflicts. As early as 2002, CIA reports said that there was a growing division between the Arab members of al-Qaida and the Indonesian members of JI who were working together in Sulawesi, Indonesia. The Indonesians thought the Arabs were too careless and focused on issues the locals didn't care too much about.

After the Bali bombings, the divide grew and splintered the Indonesian members. This time, it wasn't global versus local, but a split between the locals on the methods they use to get to their goals. And the dividing issue was the use of violence. Mainstream Jl didn't want to use violence. This is a good development.

Which brings me to my SEVENTH, the last but perhaps the most important myth: The US is the hero leading the charge against global terrorism.

The United States is the world's sole superpower. True. But in this generation's war against terrorism, the US is only a supporting player and a galvanizing point. How could that be since bin Laden framed this as a war between Islam and America? Because bin Laden hed. Because the frontline in this war is within the Muslim world. It is not a fight between Islam and America—but a battle for the soul of Islam; between a radical minority and a moderate majority.

At the core of the military war is an ideological battle. That is why language, culture, and religion play such crucial roles in convincing Muslims around the world to take sides in defining Islam's future.

The irony is that the United States, at some points, has become the strongest weapon of the radicals—when its actions and policies elicit such anger in the Muslim world that even the moderates empathize with the radicals. This is part of the reason a perceived unilateral invasion of traq pushed anti-American sentiment around the world—and particularly in Muslim countries—to all-time highs in 2003—and why fraq has become this generation's Afghanistan.

Once Americans and their alites realize this, and work with Muslim nations, then we can make some real progress. After ali, when you look at the core conflict, it's not possible for non-Muslims to win that battle. The Muslims must resolve the core conflict by themselves.

Response

What steps should we take moving forward? There are six areas we should immediately address—with both a local and global response:

 An ideological response to counter the world view pushed by the radicals.

2) A military and law enforcement response—this has been the first response of most nations. In general, stronger law enforcement cuts down the space for terrorists to operate.

 Intelligence sharing: A real effort to try to cut out vested interests so we can get a realistic view of the evolving threat

4) An educational response: Making sure radical deology is not passed on within school walls. This would cut down the number of potential new recruits. At one point, Malaysia had cameras in mosques so they could hear what ulamus were saying.

5) A financial response: Our nations in the region can do much more about cutting down terrorist financing—by tracking and disrupting fund-raising operations and the flow of money through charities.

6) A legislative response—A Singapore think tank did a study of the Philippines, for example, and found that nearly 60 percent of the terrorist attacks in the past few years could have been prevented if we had an antiterror law. Why? Because those acts were committed by people who had already been detained but were later released because of the lack.

Finally, I'd recommend a three-step approach toward these problems.

identify the problem, the threat in each instance. We must be aware of different lenses, pull out to broader perspectives so we can get beyond parochiat interests of nation-states.

2) Communicate with the public ... with the goal of co-opting the public. Why? Because you multiply your effectiveness and reach—and you simultaneously cut down the potential pool of recruits for the radicals. Governments cannot do this alone.

In order to communicate with the public, you will need to learn to work with the media—both mainstream and nontraditional.

Transparency

My vested interest in talking about retrorism is to show how media can help in counterterrorism measures—how media can help in making the world safer

One of the best examples of full transparency was when Singapore arrested 16. If members in December 2001. The next day their pictures, case histories, evidence of links to terrorism were published not only in local papers but also in international publications. By doing that, Singapore rold its people of the problem and helped prevent an ethnic, religious and human rights backlash.

The public must be told what they're facing because in the end, each nation must find the balance between trading in some civil liberties in exchange for greater security. And in a democratic country like this one, people will not give up their freedoms willingly until and unless they know exactly what they're getting in return.

More HIV carriers surfacing for free medicine - DOH

By Norman Bordadora

THE GOVERNMENT'S NEW PROgram providing free medication for AIDS has encouraged persons with the human immuno-deficiency virus to come out, be documented and monitored by health authorities, according to the Department of Health.

Joel Atlenza, coordinator of the department's HIV-AIDS program, said the National Epidemiology Center recorded 30 new HIV-positive cases in March after announcing in February that free antiretroviral treatments were available at six government hos-

Atienza said the 30 new cases recorded in March were the highest monthly incidence recorded by the DOH since 1984, when HIV/AIDS was a relatively new, and less understood, threat to

"Before, we would have 10 to 20 cases; now we have 30 cases, the highest month-to-month number of cases," Atienza told the weekly Kapihan sa Newsdesk news forum Friday.

Atienza said that while many factors were behind the increase in the number of cases recorded in March, one of them would have to be the government's offering of free HIV medicines. "There are many factors to consider. We can say that the increase in the cases could also be attributed to improvement in recording. Added to that, we made an initial statement in February that treatment was now available for our brothers and sisters who have AIDS," Roxas

The antiretroviral medicines are available for free at the Regional Institute for Tropical Medicine in Taguig, the San Lezaro Hospital and the Philippine General Hospital in Manila, the Ilocos Medical Center in La Union, the Vicente Sotto Medical Center in Cebu and the Davao Medical Center.

'The DOH has been improving its recording and evaluation. And this is a result of its partnership with different stakeholders as weil," said Dr. Nenet Ortega, program manager of the Remedios AIDS Foundation.

You can go to six hospitals for counseling and testing. Also, there is a mandatory testing for migrant workers since it is a policy of the receiving countries," Ortega said.

AIDS testing, however, isn't bemg offered for free. "But if you're an individual responsible for your behavior, what's P150 to P300," Ortega said

Arienza said the DOH registry had recorded 2,484 cases. Even with an estimated 11,200 cases unreported, Atienza said the Philippines remained classified in the international health community as a low-prevalence country as far as AIDS was concerned.

"But there is cause for alarm, Attenza said. He said that "people practicing high-risk behavior," such as sex workers and intravenous drug users, "are thriving," a situation worsened by lack of knowledge about the condition and the low use of condoms. With Scott James

Unicef also described the country's efforts at addressing malnutrition as insufficient.

See what singular love the Father has for us: we are called children of God, and we really are. This is why the world does not know us, because it did not know him.

The Good Shepherd

Jesus said, "I am the good shepherd. The good shepherd gives his life for the sheep. Not so the hired hand or any other person who is not the shepherd and to whom the sheep do not belong. They abandon the sheep as soon as they see the wolf coming, then the wolf snatches and scatters the sheep. This is because the hired hand works for pay and cares nothing for the sheep.

"I am the good shepherd. I know my own and my own know me, as the Pather knows me and I know the Father. Because of this I give my life for my sheep.

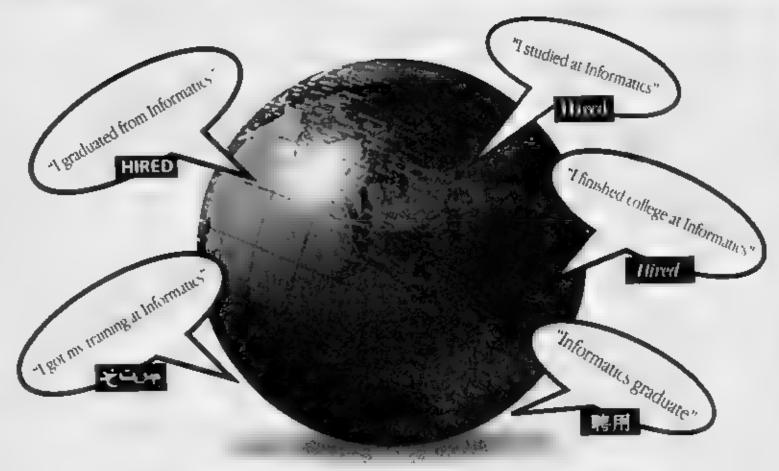

"I have other sheep that are not of this fold. These I have to lead as well, and they shall listen to my voice. Then there will be one flock since there is one Shepherd

The Easter power is the person, the presence of Jesus with us in the Body of Christ, his own people. This name of Jesus (meaning one who saves the people) is the crucified and risen one among us now. One of the ways we image the Risen Christ among us is the Good Shepherd who protects the sheep with his very life. God in Jesus knows us, knows to witom we belong-God and one another-and we are called to listen only to Jesus' voice and follow him alone. We too are the beloved children of God with Jesus, called to lay down our lives with him for one another and even for the sheep that aren't of the fold. Are we good sheep, beloved children, and shepherds to one another?

5 suspected NPAs cry torture

By Marion Ramos PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

CAMP VICENTE LIM-FIVE MEN EARher arrested on suspicion of being New People's Army (NPA) members yesterday claimed they were physically and mentally tortured by their police and military captors.

Speaking with the INCORER inside their detention cell at this camp, Aristedes Sarmsento, Michael Masayes, Axel Alejandro Pinpin, Rico Ybañez and Riel Custodio related their experience while being interrogated inside several dirnly lit rooms.

It was the first time the suspects were able to talk to the media after the police held them incommunicado for a week.

But of the five, only Sarmiento, Masayes and Custodio accused their captors of physically hurting them.

Both Pinpin and Ybañez said they were only "mentally tortured."

Masayes, who said he was not an cionado and a compulsive gambler, suffered the most.

What they did to us was worse. We were treated like animals," Masayes said, his voice cracking. "They were forcing me to admit that I am an NPA commander in Cavite. But I told them that I'm just a cockfighting afficionado."

His right arm had a superficial reached for comment. wound while Sarmiento's right leg bore a big wound.

Both said they sustained the injuries when police and naval intelligence operatives forced them to board a van at gunpoint during their arrest in Tagaytay City on the evening of April 28.

They held us down on the floor of the vehicle. Then they beat us with M-16s," Masayes said.

They said their captors did nothing for their wounds.

"If I wanted to drink water, they would hit my head. My head is still was inside a Philippine Navy camp.

A few hours after they were seized, the suspects said they were brought to a dark sail facility where they were kept in one cell, except for Ybañez who was placed in solitary confinement.

By their reckoning, the five said they were brought to at least four detention

They said that for three days and three nights, they were blindfolded and handcuffed at their backs.

"We were never told of the reasons for Masayes said the beatings continued our arrests. Our captors were just forcwhile his captors were forcing him to ing us to admit that we were NPA rebels and that we were involved with the socalled destabilization plot," Pinpin said.

The five said they were finally taken from their cell and made to board at least two vehicles. It was only then that the police removed their blindfolds.

Moments later, they were presented to the media in Camp Crame after which they were again transferred to another cell.

"The room was so dark we could not even tell its color. It completely had no ventilation," Samuento said. "We just knew each other by voice."

After a week, the police finally allowed them to see their relatives who staged a rally in front of this camp shortly after the group was presented to a court in Tagaytay City on Friday.

The Calabarzon police had earlier denied having custody of the five.

Two more militants abducted

THE CRACKDOWN ON MILITANTS CONTI-

Two more leaders of militant groups were abducted in separate incidents in a span of seven days in Luzon and Mindanao.

On Priday, a leader of the party-list group Anakpawis was abducted by two armed men in Angeles City.

On April 30, a leader of the militant group Anak Bayan went missing in Zamboanga del p Sur and was believed abducted.

The abduction of Benedicto Magdaong, 52, brought to 19 the cases of involuntary disappearances of members of militant groups in Central Lazon since 2005, the Bagong Alyansang Makabayan said on Saturday. Magdaong is chair of the Anakpawis chapter in Barangay Marisol, one of the big urban poor communities in Angeles City.

Magdaong's wife reported seeing two men talking to her husband at around 2 a.m. in their house. They dragged him rater to a waiting car.

Intelligence agent

According to his wife, Magdaong worked briefly as an intelligence operative of the Nanonal Bureau of Investigation.

In Zamboanga del Sur, Brian Macalisang, 16, a leader of Anak Bayan, disappeared while on his way from Tukuran to visit a friend in Lakewood town.

Brian's friend, however, said he failed to show up.

Susan Macalisang Amorticha, 36, told the Inquirer that before her son went missing, Brian had phoned her to say he was in Barangay Tubod in Lakewood. But the call went dead.

Michelle Saquin of Karapatan said the group went to the Lakewood police office where they learned of an abduction incident on the day Brian disappeared

Van driver Christopher Pitogo Narvasa, 26, told police he was driving to Lakewood from Pagadian City when four armed men hailed him. Narvasa said armed men forcibly took one of his male passengers and transferred him to another van. Amoritcha said Narvasa's description of the "abducted" passenger fit her son But Maj. Robert Rabasio of the mintary's civil relations group said they had no report of an abduction in Zamboanga del Sur

Release demanded

In another incident, Karapatan demanded the immediate release of three lefust activists arrest ed on April 30 at a military checkpoint in Barananauan town in Ouezon province.

Sherly Leocario, a staff member of Karapatan-Quezon chapter, assailed the military for ets continuous detention of Joel de la Rosa, Armand de los Santos and Alexis Uy.

Army Maj. Jose Broso, spokesperson of the mulitary's Southern Luzon Command, earlier said that De la Rosa, Uy and a certain Arie. Danao were arrested by Army soldiers after they were suspected of being New People's Army rebeis.

Karapatan and other leftist groups strongly densed the three were communist guerrillas. As this developed, the International Labor Soridenty Mission, whose members from 12 countries investigated the killings of farmer and workers' leaders and labor rights advocates in the Philippines, warus the police, military and defense officials excluded from the task force that the government will form to look into the slayings. Camp restrictions for all, says Senga

ZAMBOANGA CITY-RESTRICTIONS ON civilian access to certain parts of Camp Aguinaldo, the headquarters of the Armed Forces of the Philippines in Quezon City, were intended for the general public and not just | $ journalists, AFP Chief of Staff Gen. Generoso Senga said during a recent visit here.

"It's not directed against a particular group but for every (visitor)," Senga said

Members of the Defense Press Corps had raised a how over the sudden tightening of rules on access to and movement within of Camp Aguinaldo.

In a memorandum dated April 20, AFP spokesperson Col. Tristan Kison said only members of the DPC and reporters accredited by his office were to be allowed entry to the military headquarters and only during for scheduled press briefings or media events.

"Except for the PIO and DPC offices and the grandstand, all areas inside the camp are offlimits unless there are events allowed for media coverage," Kison said.

Journalists covering Camp Aguinaldo suspected that the tightening of regulations had something to do with the military's efforts to shield the Mayuga report from the public. The report cleared four senior military officers of alleged involvement in election fraud in Mindanso during the 2004 presidential election.

Senga told reporters at the celebration of the 30th anniversary of the Southern Command here that the regulations had long been in existence at Camp Aguinaldo but the military had been lement about enforcing them. Julie S. Alipala, PDI Mindanao Bureau

Others compare the notorious strip to a "deadly cancer" eating away at the morals and values of society.

Tarnishing Recto

"It's sad that the younger generation is relating C.M. Recto Avenue to a commercial district that's known for falsified documents. It's really disgusting," lamented Batangas Vice Gov. Richard Recto, grandson of the man after whom the street was named

Manila Mayor Lito Atienza admitted the continued operation of Recto U was not only giving the nation's capital a had reputation, it was also tarmshing the illustrious name and patriotic legacy of the late Sen. Claro

The Batangas native was three-term congressman, president of Constitutional Convention, Supreme Court associate justice, education, health and public welfare commissioner, a senator and an am-

In a move apparently aimed at honoring Recto, the Manila city government passed on Feb. 17, 1961 Marcelo Azcarraga Street-which stretches from Legarda (Sampaloc) to Del Pan (Tondo) and was a commercial center since the early 1900s-to C.M. Recto Av-

Urban renewal

On Feb. 28, 1995, then President Fidel V. Ramos issued Prociamation No. 661 placing portions of Recto U under the "renewal and infrastructure development program" of the Public Estates Authority.

In a 2004 directive, President Macapagal-Arroyo transferred the authority to the Home Guaranty Corp., a government-owned firm.

Asked how the city government was going to remedy the situation, Atienza said they were planning a "massive crackdown," and asked this reporter to hold off the story's publication.

The mayor also said they needed "at least six complamants to ensure effective law enforcement," stressing that they were "very serious in sending people to jail."

However, there was little evidence that previous police and NBI operations had any deterrent effects on the illegal practice

Police protection

Sometime in February last year, Apenza ordered the Western Police District (WPD) to put an end, once and for all, to the illegal operations of Recto U which, he said, was apparently getting protection from crooked cops and barangay officials in the area.

"This is the only [logical reason] why these shops and dens are operating under the very noses of authorities without being raided. But their time is up. If our city cops cannot stop their operation, then I will personally see to it that I write 'finis' to this unlawful practice. I will apprehend these bad cops and village chiefs,"

Atienza was quoted as telling City him of Taruc's problem

Admitting that he had run out of patience, the mayor, who is on his third and last term, said his instruction to WPD would be the "last one."

But going after Recto U's notorious "document specialists" won't be a waik in the park, according to Sr. Insp. Ariel Caramuan, head of the WPD university belt detachment.

Caramuan disclosed that "some of the alleged fake diploma shop operators have managed to secure hawk-(four months after the nationalist er's permits [from City Hall]. That senator's death), an ordinance re- complicates matters. We need to coordinate any drive with City Hall."

(CHEd) officer in charge Saturnino Ocampo Jr. observed that the public seemed to have complacently accepted Recto U as a way of life.

Some C.M. Recto Avenue shop owners interviewed for this story professed to know nothing about the illegai trade.

Even the late Sen. Benigno "Ninoy" Agumo Jr. reportedly patronized the strip's diploma mills.

In an interview with the INQUIRER IN August 2003, Dr. Romeo Taruc recounted that Aguino tried to help him get into college in the 1950s (when pino workers in need of fake diplohis late father Luis was still actively involved in the Hukbalahap movement) by making the rounds of shops along C.M. Recto Avenue that sold fake diplomas.

Aquino, then an adviser to the late President Ramon Magsaysay, tried to get around the problem of the younger Tarue not having a high school diploma. Tarac, orphaned at 2 when his mother died, had completed only fifth grade. From the age of 14 until he turned 17, Taruc was in the mountains of Zambales and the Sierra Madre with his father.

Taking the teener along with him, Aguino went to C.M. Recto Avenue where fake diplomas were sold.

"[1] buy you a diploma so you can enrol in college," Taruc recalled Aquino telling him.

But the owner of Bohol Colleges in Manila declined to accept Taruc even if he had what seemed to be a genume diploma.

Taruc said the owner was afraid the government would get back at him for accepting the son of a rebel.

Agumo then went to Executive Secretary Ruben Manahan and mid

Manahan said Taruc should take the validating exams for dependents of war veterans. The battery of tests, two hours long each and taken over nine days, showed that Thruc was at Par Eastern University (whose ried to Josephine, sister of former President Corazon C. Aquino) where he graduated at the top of his class in

Clearly, society is partly to blame Commission on Higher Education for making acceptable something that in other societies would be morally repugnant, said lawyer Elfren Meneses, head of the NBI's antifrand and computer crimes divi-

> Both Meneses and Ocampo pointed out that the falsification of public and private documents was a crune.

> According to Articles 171 and 172 of the Revised Penal Code, the illegal trade is punishable by fines and jail terms of up to 12 years.

According to NBI and WPD old-rimers, the illegal operation thrives to this day mainly because of countless prospective overseas Filmas, birth and marriage certificates, among other foreign job requirements.

An undisclosed number of OFWs have been sent home and black usted by their foreign employers due to fake documents they had obtained from Recto U, giving the country and its labor export industry a had name.

Old problem

Philippine Overseas Employment Administration (POEA) head Rosalinda Baldoz acknowledged it was an "old problem" and one "that is not addressed fully" by government.

According to Baldoz, "local firms sending workers (with falsified papers) abroad face possible suspension of their operations," among other sanchons.

She did not say if some companies had been padlocked for violating the POEA ruling, but stressed that the agency did not tolerate the practice.

Lawyer Gonzalo Duque, POEA deputy administrator during the latter part of the Ramos administration, noted that "in most cases, it's the blue collar job-OFWs who resort to the use of fake credentials."

"Artisans, carpenters, plumbers, electricians and the like often learn their skills through informal apprenticeship training programs. Thus, in most cases, they do not have the requisite diplomas and credentials required by foreign employers. The only way for these technically trained individuals to get hired is by using fake school credentials and job references," explained Duque, who is also Speaker Jose de Venecia's special adviser on

Most, if not all recruitment firms for this particular labor group, were not keen on verifying the validity of the documents submitted to them, said Duque, who is also president of Lyceum-Northwestern University in Dagupan

In Middle Eastern countries like Saudi Arabia, an iquama or work permit prevents an OFW from engaging in any other work aside from the one specified in the document.

Change of work

But an OFW can always apply for a change of work permit. All he needs to do is present valid credentials that will prove his competency in the line of work he is applying for.

So "it is not surprising to see a truck driver assuming the post of personnel manager the next day, or a carpenter being issued a work permit intended for a fiber optic cable splicer. All it takes is a fake diploma and a little backing from the OFW's Saudi sponsor," Duque

Sometime in 1999, CHEd revealed that some policemen had managed to join the service using fake school credentials.

The commission disclosed the irregularity after it discovered that there were more than 700 spurious Special Orders covering thousands of "graduates" of the Philippine College of Criminology in 1997

Countermeasures

For government personnel, falsification of any official document is considered a grave offense, an act punishable by dismissal from the service, said Civil Service Commission (CSC) chair Karina Constantino-David.

For the first offense alone, erring personnel face dismissal," David warned.

According to the CSC head, they had "found quite a number of fake diplomas. Upon verification we file the appropriate administrative cases."

Like the CSC, the Professional Regulation Commission (PRC) employs similar ventication procedures, among other "countermeasures," according to commission chair Leonor president, Nicanor Reyespawagemandatak But Rosero said "many professionals still go through the legal process instead of dealing with fixers and document-forgers."

The PRC had earlier entered into a memorandum of agreement with the PNP which is tasked with going after criminal groups faisifying PRC licenses and other documents.

Incidentally, the PRC headquarters is located just a few blocks from Recto U.

House resolution

The House of Representatives committee on higher and technical education, meanwhile, believes that "the prosecution of these instant diploma shops will not effectively solve the problem."

Akbayan party-list Rep. Loretta Ann Rosales, one of the active members of the panel, expressed her willingness to sponsor a resolution calling for a House inquiry into the illegal trade, said committee secretary Beatriz Sanga via text message.

For her part, committee chair Rep. Cynthia Villar promised to initiate hearings in aid of legislation to address the issue "with the end in view of coming up with appropriate measures to mitigate, if not obliterate, falsification of academic credentials."

In a faxed statement, Villar wondered "why this practice, while unlawful, thrives and is being patronized by a substantial number of job-seeking Filipinos."

"Somehow it exposes the underlying problems in higher education, leading to the fact that some of our countrymen have become so desperate that they have resorted to this illegal practice of using falsified documents in order to secure gainful employment abroad," she said in her statement.

Bite the bullet

Yes, desperate as in "kapit sa patalim (grip-ping the knife's blade)," observed Dennis Cunanan, deputy director general of the state-run Technology and Livelthood Research Center, or TLRC.

Those OFWs are apparently forced by circumstances to bite the bullet. This problem is an offshoot of poverty," Cunanan said.

But the former president of the National Union of Students of the Philippines professed that "poverty is not a valid excuse to resort to the illegal practice, one that should not be tolerated."

And "rejected outright by our people," stressed Presidential Adviser on Education Mona Valisno.

"Because of its resulting damage to the moral base of our society," said the former higher education commissioner.

Dr. Emmanuel Angeles, chancellor of the Angeles University Foundation in Pampanga and a member of the consultative commission that proposed revisions to the 1987 Constitution, shared the same views.

Issues like Recto U should provoke a deeper examination of the country's educational system and national psyche as a whole, said Angeles, the former president and CEO of the government-owned Clark Development Corp.

Education is key

For former Sep. Francisco Tatad, an authentic self-examination should include both our weaknesses and strengths-"a conditio sine qua non (without which it could not be) for our becoming a smore serious people."

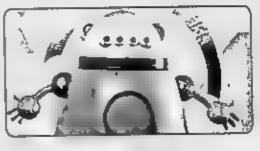

in his book #Hard Facts for Hard Times (Or some truths we'd rather not talk about)," Tatad wrote, "All our institutions, values and norms are in disarray. They must be rebuilt and the nation with them."

The opposition stalwart pointed out: "We have become a lawless people... (But) the problem begins with us, not with others. We must learn to admit our own mistakes and stop blaming everyone else."

Tatad asserted "there are no quick fixes, no overnight solutions," adding that "education is the key. But we must first know who we are and what we want to become."

Army, rebs won't accept peace zones

LUCENA CITY—THE CALL FOR RESPECT FOR "peace zones," which has been repeatedly made by Sierra Madre natives caught in the crossfire of the government's counterinsurgency operations, has been turned down by the military and New People's Army rebels.

What peace zones are they talking about? Any declaration of peace zone is useless. The military will never respect it anyway," communist spokesperson Gregono "Ka Roger" Rosal said in a mobile phone interview.

He added that if the natives really want genuine peace, they should address Malacañang and not the NPA.

"Were more than willing to meet them (the government) for genuine peace but GMA (President Macapagal-Arroyo) sabotaged the negotiations," Rosal said

He claimed that President Macapagal-Arroyo had breached previous agreements that made the resumption of the peace tasks nearly impossible.

With the imminent resumption of armed hostilities in Sierra Madre between government forces and communist rebels, Catholic Church members in northern Quezon called on the combatants to respect the peace zones that the Church and multisectora, groups declared in 2004.

Army Maj. Jose Broso. spokesperson of the military's Southern Luzon Command based in Camp Nakar here, maintained that the government forces share the peace aspiration of the people.

"But there are terronst groups that have been disturbing the toppling the government. It is the military's solemn duty to defend the government and crush the terrorist movement," he said in an interview here.

When categorically asked if military forces will continue to conduct combat operations in Sierra Madre, Broso replied: "Yes. But we assure the affected communities that the troops in the field fully respect human rights."

With the statement of the military and the NPA on the futility of the community-declared peace zones, the fragile peace situation in Mount Banahaw is now also in peril.

"If they are really pro-people, the military and the NPA should heed the call for peace of different communities. If they can't stop their fighting, at least they should wage it elsewhere," said Jay Lim, spokesperson of the Kapatirang Aray sa Kaunlaran ng Bayan (Kaakbay-Quezon), the biggest multisectoral organization in the province

Lim lamented that the peace aspiration of Banahaw and Sierra Madre settlers has been eclipsed by the "hunger-for-enemy-blood" frame of mind of the military and in December last year, Kaakbay-Quezon led a multisectoral initiative that declared Banahaw as a "Zone of Ecological and Human Peace." Delfin T. Mallart Jr., PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

Gov wants mining probe reviewed before results released

Gov. Raul Lee has urged the government to subject the findings of the commission chaired by Sorsogon Bishop Arturo Bastes, which has been investigating the effects of Lafayette minusg operations in Albay, to a review by competent scientific groups before it is made public.

Lee expressed hope that the delay in the release of the final report of the commission would give them a chance to ensure that its findings were backed by scientific data and facts obtained by means of independent and credi-

He suggested that the commission should not be allowed to brief media after submitting its report to the President.

The Left and the antimining groups are a deadly combination. Unfortunately, they have been appointed in government. We must' not allow them to advance their advocacies at our expense: We have seen how one story that they had leaked had started to scare people in Sorsogon from buying

5,000 poor fishermen from the into dubentertainment. municipalities of Bacon, Prieto Draz, Gubat, Barcelon and Bulusan even poorer as people stopped buying and eating fish

"Many have completely lost their means of livelihood. We cannot afford yet another set of base less findings that would only lead to a repeat of the fish scare and its tragge repercussions," he said.

Lee alluded to the wives and the daughters of poor fishermen who have been forced to go to Manila to look for jobs as maids, waitresses, and some who have been coaxed

The first hoax, he said, was triggered by the antimining groups who alleged that Lafayette's project in Rapu-Rapu island across the sea in Albay province caused a mercury contamination of Sorsogon's coasta, areas and fish.

PNP checking reports 'jueteng' back in Central Luzon

CAMP OLIVAS, PAMPANGA-"Jueteng" operations have "slowly resurfaced" in some areas in Central Luzon where it had been strong a year ago, the top ponce commander in the region said on ILOILO CITY -FROM FORMER allies of President Macapagal-Arroyo, advocates of federalism here are now her critics as they rejected the campaign to amend the Constitution through the governmentsponsored signature campaign called people's initiative.

Some members of the Citizens Movement for Federal Philippines (CMFP) are seeking the ouster of Ms Arroyo. Others denounced the proposal to shift to a parliamentary form of government through the signature campaign because it would only benefit those in power. Still others wanted the government to focus on voters' education.

Yet, only a year ago, they have praised Ms Arroyo for favoring federalism to the extent of including it m her 2004 election platform and her State of the Nation Address.

Int'l group sees systematic killing of leftists

By Carla P. Gomez PDI Visayas Bureau

BACOLOD CITY-THE INTERnational Labor Solidarity Mission yesterday said it believes there is an ongoing systematic campaign to liquidate National Federation of Sugar Workers' organizers, terrorize its members and scare people away from the NFSW and other militant and progressive organizations la Negros Occidental. (See related story on Page A18)

The ILSM, in its report presented to the media here, also linked the pro-government Revolutionary Proletarian Army-Alex Boncayao Brigade to some of the killings, and found the administration of President Macapagal-Arroyo culpable for ot stopping the slaying of militants.

"We find the Arroyo government culpable for human rights violagions inasmuch as it deliberately creates the conditions for these political killings to occur, both by emission and by commission," the ILSM members said in their report. The team composed of delegates from Belgium, Canada, Den-

Occidental this week to investigate the killing of Edwin Bargamento, Mario Pernandez and Manuel Batolino, the abduction of Perseus Geagoni, and the continuing harassment experienced by NESW organizers, its report said.

These atrochies in Negros appear similar in pattern to atrocities suffered by the Kilusang Magbubulod ng Pilipinas, Kilusang Mayo Uno, Anakpawis party-list group, Bayan Muna party-list group, Bayan, Karapatan and other legal progressive organizations not only in Negros but in other regions as well, it said.

The ILSM report noted that the atrocities were occurring alongside the Arroyo administration's constant branding of these organizations as communist fronts, therefore enemies of the state.

The ILSM members called on the government to stop the "killings and political repression," and on the public and the international community to exert pressure to sharter the "prevailing culture of impunity and policy of coddling human rights violators."

The ILSM report said the killing mark, New Zealand and the of the NFSW organizers were Philippines have been in Negros well-planned and pre-meditated.

Subic officials step up drive vs smuggling of oil in freeport

SUBIC BAY FREEPORT-THE antismuggling task force here has stepped up its operations against oil smuggling and started conducting surprise inspections of facilines of oil companies based in thus freeport.

"Our spot inspections will make sure that oil coming in and out of the freeport is properly accounted for," said Jose Calimina, chief of the Task Force Subic.

On Wednesday, Calimlim made a fuel inventory and checked the oil stock of PTT Oil Co., one of the biggest oil firms here.

He inspected a storage tank and found it to contain 373,000 barrels of oil that PTT imported in March.

Calimim said there had been large-scale technical smuggling of firel here in the past years.

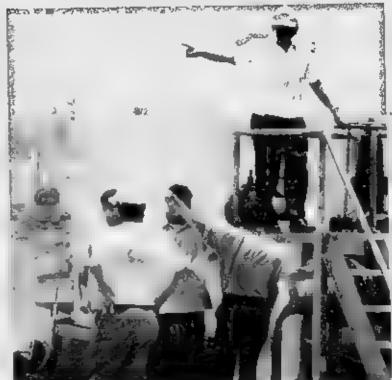

"Oil smuggling occurs when they declare aviation gas as diesel in order to pay lower taxes," he said.

During the inspection of PTT, Calimlim discovered that there was a small discrepancy, measured in a few barrels, in the stock.

But it could be explained by evaporation due to high temperatures and possibly a little spillage," he said.

He said they have yet to record large-scale oil smuggling here.

Joy Alvarado, deputy administrator of Subic Bay Metropolitan Authority, said the amount of oil they found in the storage tank of PTT conformed to the amount port the task force's efforts to PDI Central Luson Desk

Jin Sukanya, PTT comptroller, welcomed the audit of their oil stock and said they would sup-

Calimlim said they would continue to conduct spot inspections in more than 30 oil tanks here to ensure that the government would collect proper taxes from Allan Macatuno, oil imports.

2 justices relate whys, hows of SC mind, ruling

BAGUIO CITY—STRESSING THE role of the judiciary in today's turbuient times, two Supreme Court justices this week gave separate views on the high court's responsibility in the search for truth.

Chief Justice Artemio Panganiban likened the judiciary to the media in terms of the quest for truth and information while Associate Justice Leonardo Quisumbing dealt with the crucial role of the SC's "judicial privilege."

The SC held summer sessions in this city until May 4.

Court views

The views of Panganiban and Quisumbing were seen to reflect the thinking of the high court's justices who had been confronted with controversial legal issues that hounded the Arroyo administration.

After Holy Week, the SC upheld Executive Order 420 which called for a unified national ID system.

Later, it struck down as unconstitutional portions of Executive Order 464 and voided the government's calibrated preemptive response (CPR) to protest rallies. EO 464 prevented executive and military officials from appearing at congressional inquiries in aid of legislation without the approval of President Macapagal-Arroyo. The CPR had been used by lawmen to dispersing railies against the administration.

Upheld law

The high court, though, sustained the legality of Batas Pambansa 880 which provided the guidelines in the conduct of rallies and the acquisition of rally

Panganiban said the courts and media have a common purpose. the search for truth.

*But the press and the courts are actually powerless," he said. "We are followed by the people media is believed by the people because what you report is true." "But we differ in approaches," Panganiban said media reports the news as truth as soon as possible while the court needs more time to deliberate on the legal issues to properly arrive at the truth.

"We have a commonality as the country moves towards transparency," he said.

Because of this, he said, "the high court is no longer a fortress the way it was regarded in the ancient times when histices were treated as demigods."

Quisumbing said the courts have "judicial privilege," referring to its power to intervene in a case or controversy and later resolve the issue.

Collateral damage

In the exercise of this privilege, he said, "some parties can be injured" since the decisions could be harmful to one of the parties.

Both justices reacted to criticisms that the high court is taking much time to decide controverstal assues affecting the Arroyo administration.

Panganiban said the SC deliberates carefully on legal issues that confront it and takes time to issue rulings because it was a collegial body.

He said the high court should not be faulted for taking its time in deciding on crucial issues.

Negros mayors won't go board's way, welcome STL in towns

By Carla P. Gomez PD! Visayas Bureau

BACOLOD CITY-THE LEAGUE of Municipalities of the Philippines-Negros Occidental chapter has passed a resolution inviting the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes Office (PCSO) to conduct the Small Town Lottery (STL) project in the 19 municipalities of the province.

The municipal mayors unanimously passed Resolution No. 1 just days after the Negros Occiunanimously adopted Wednesday a resolution opposing the entry of STL in the province.

The provincial board passed the resolution to belie an announcement made in Cebu by William Medici, PCSO's Visayas-Mindanao manager, that the Negros Occidental provincial board had invited STL to operate in the province.

Medici later clarified that he presumed that the provincial board has adopted a resolution favoring STL because the PCSO dental provincial board also board of directors has already approved the operation of STL in Negros Occidental.

He explained the PCSO would not grant permit for STL to operate in a certain city or province unless the local legislative body adopts a resolution "inviting" STL to operate in its area of jurisdiction.

The LMP-Negros Occidental resolution "Inviting" STL, signed by league president Mayor Manuel Escalante III of Manapla, was transmitted to Gov. Joseph Marañon on Friday.

The LMP-Negros Occidental said they decided to invite the operanon of STL after a "thorough consideration of the benefits and advantages it could bring to the general populace and also the local government of a municipality to provide the much-needed income for its residents and revenue to the LGU (local government unit)."

The operation of the STL under government control and supervision ensures equitable income for all sectors concerned in terms of regular source on a day-to-day basis and even on a long-term support system, the resolution further said.

The mayors added that the earlier STL is implemented, "the better it will be for the countless number of our people who are in dire need of a legal means to derive gainful income."

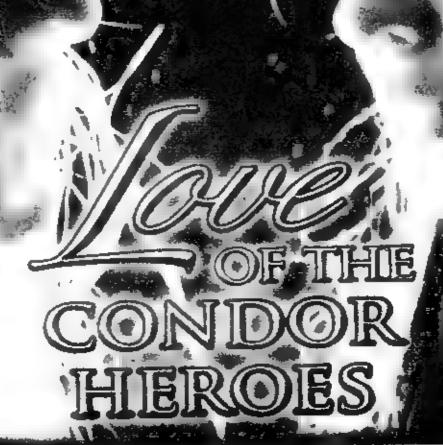

"Our resolution is an invitation for the PCSO to make proposals on the STL, it is up to the individual mayors to decided if they will allow STL in their areas," Escalante told the inquirer yesterday.

Marañon said the mayors have emous' concerns about STI,

Children from Manila's underbelly kick up a storm in this unique dance school

From a handful of promising dancers, center now has 200 scholars

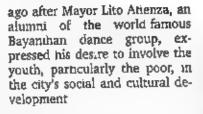

By Tina G. Santos

WHO SAYS DANCE LESSONS are only for the rich?

In the City of Manila, around 200 children from depressed communities—some so poor that they have been forced to drop out of school-have been lured into the world of dance through the beauty of movement and the allure of music.

The aspiring dancers, mostly girls aged seven to 14, are scholars of the Manila Dance and Cultural Arts Center, where they are trained to be light and graceful on their feet.

The center was set up six years

At about the same time, renowned dance masters Tony Fabella, Eddie Elejar and Luther Perez were thinking of implementing a performing arts program for gifted but underprivileged children.

"We all know that poverty alleviation must begin at the level of the physical body, accordingly, food and shelter. However, art and culture feed the mind and spirit, the faculties that can inspire the poor to try to get out of their impovenshed environment," Fabella said.

On top of this, Pabella said it was quite frustrating to see a.l that raw talent in children go to waste just because they had no money for training. "Many of them have poten-

"We wanted raw talents because it's better to teach those who have absolutely no training at all. And definitely, if you had undergone training, let's say at seven years old, you don't belong to the poor community," Fabella

The dance center was first set up at the Aurora Quezon Elementary School in San Andres, Just recently, the center was moved to a bigger, two-story dance studio inside the premises of the Museo Pambata on Roxas Boulevard

From a handful of promising young dancers, the center now has 200 "scholars" undergoing training in classical ballet, tap, jazz, modern and folk dance.

"We were alarmed because transferring LPG, a flammable substance, in a public place is very hazardous," Marantan told the Inquire-

AST JAN. 17, I LEFT MANILA FOR PUNta Arenas in Argentina with four other Filipinos to join a seismic vessel crew. Working on a boat was never part of my plans.

While still in college taking up a business degree, my goal was to work in a top 100 company-start from below and work my way up to top management.

But the country's worsening economy and the high cost of living in Manila made me think twice about the career path I had built in my mind.

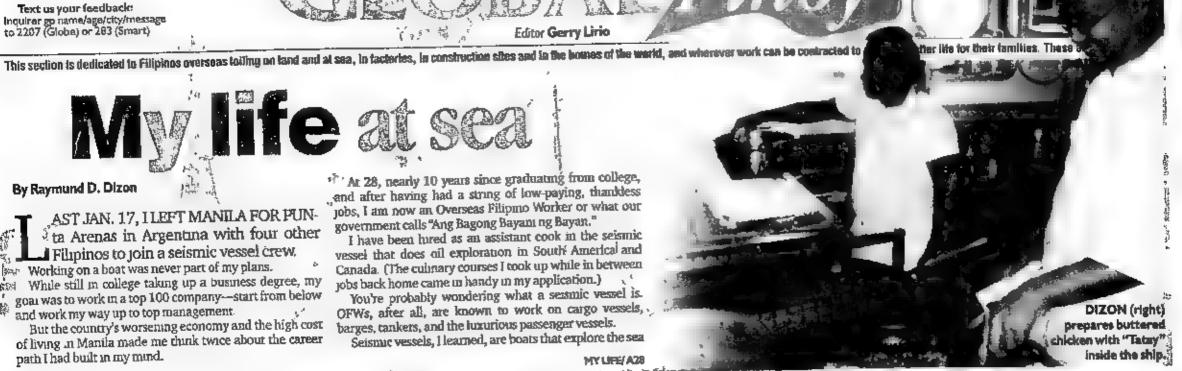

At 28, nearly 10 years since graduating from college, and after having had a string of low-paying, thankless jobs, I am now an Overseas Filipmo Worker or what our government calls "Ang Bagong Bayam ng Bayan."

I have been hired as an assistant cook in the seismic vessel that does oil exploration in South Americal and Canada. (The culmary courses I took up while in between jobs back home came in handy in my application.)

You're probably wondering what a sessmic vessel is. OFWs, after all, are known to work on cargo vessels, barges, tankers, and the luxurious passenger vessels.

Seismic vessels, I learned, are boats that explore the sea

GlobeQUEST Offers Affordable PC-based Prepaid Calling Service

GlobeQUEST has come up with the country's first PC based VoIP (Voice over Internet Protocol) service that utilizes traditional telephone prepaid cards to allow corporate and individual users to save as much as 78 percent in international calls.

Dubbed as GlobeQUEST Web Phone, the prepaid calling service is available through any Internet-connected PC, preferably those with broadband connection. It can be used to call a landline and mobile phone anywhere in the country and abroad at very low rates.

For instance, calls to the top 10 most popular foreign destinations, namely, Australia, Canada, China, Hong Kong, Ma.aysia, Singapore, South Korea, Taiwan, Thailand, and USA, are merely charged P4.50 or $0.086 per minute as compared to the traditional IDD rate of $0.40

Thus, companies which require constant communication with business associates in the said countries can realize substantial savings if they use GlobeQUEST Web Phone, said Jesus C. Romero, Giobe-QUEST Head

GlobeQUEST Web Phone is also targeted towards busy professionals who often have to work and make calls while mo-

With their Wi-Fi (Wireless Fidelity) enabied laptops or PDAs (Personal Digital Assistants), executives, sales persons, journalists and other field workers can easily make a call via the internet via hundreds of GlobeQUEST Wireless Internet Zone (WiZ) Hotspots scattered in strategic locations nationwide.

Reaching a Globe Handyphone (GHP) subscriber through an Internet-connected laptop or PDA only costs P4.50 per minute as compared to P6.50 per minute for mobue originating calls.

GlobeQUEST Web Phone is being offered minally in tandem with the Globel prepaid card which can be purchased from any Globelines Payments and Services Center and from prepaid card retail outlets nationwide.

Globel was designed as the first universal call card, to be used from any Globelines, Globe Handyphone or TM phone. However, the lowest IDD rates are currently applicable only to calls from Globehnes. Thus, although the product has been growing in popularity, interested users in areas not covered by Globelines cannot avair of the lowest IDD rates, thereby, prompting the company to look for other ways to offer the service to a wider segment of the population "We do not expect GlobeQUEST Web Phone to totally replace regular phones in making IDD calls. However, there are a number of factors that may make people turn to it. First, GlobeQUEST Web Phone offers cheaper rates than regular landline and mobile phones, second, it is available in prepaid, thus, more attractive to budget-conscious users; third, people are spending more time on the Internet, thus, they may want to place calls from their PCs, and lastly, with the growing number of road warmors, being able to work and make calls via their laptop and PDAs would be a plus factor," Romero said.

While other popular Web-based programs provide free PC-to-PC international calls, he said that they are only available to subscribers who must be logged in at the same time

Romero noted that authough these Webbased programs offer a lower rate of around $0.02-$0.03 per minute for calls to the US from the Philippines as compared to the GlobeQUEST Web Phone rate of $0.08, they are only available via credit card and for a minimum load of around $10

"Not everyone has a credit card and is willing to buy $10 worth of credit for international calls. This is where we come in, GlobeQUEST Web Phone offers convemence and accessibility, not to mention the cheapest IDD rates in the country today," he said.

"Why are there too many Pinoys here, Tatay?"

WARD-WINNING POP SINGER AND COMPOSER REY Valera found himself "cornered" and without a ready answer when, sometime in early 1998, his then teenage son Valor asked him: "Why did your generation allow this to happen?"

Australia, Valor was just wondering why Filipinos in millions have been forced to leave their country in search of jobs, like those he would see turning up on masse for his father's concerts overseas.

The poet in Valera took several months to come up with a satisfactory explanation—in the medium he knew

"Sa Aking Panahon" (In My Time), he said, can be considered his letter to the Filipino youth who, like his children, are inheriting a country which previous generations down to their parents seemed to have messed up.

Going abroad

The song wryly alludes to Nature's perversion in the name of commerce (Vegetables laced with formalin), the Filipinos' so-called colonial "GI Joe" mentality, and the moral decadence that has turned kidnapping into a lucrative trade and young kids into rapists.

But about a third of the lyrics tackle the brain drain (After graduating/ Off to America we go/ For we see no hope here) and lack of job opportunities that have driven many breadwinners to leave their families for "Soudi" and other "Blue Seal"

The OFW phenomenon figured promipently in the composition because, in the first place, the whole song was inspired by the question Valera got from his son Valor about the exodus of unemployed Filipinos.

"I feit cornered and couldn't answer him," Valera told the Inquirer in a recent interview. Easily I could have just blamed everything on the government, but when be asked why 'my generation' allowed all these to happen, I had nothing to say."

The father of four further confided that "Panahon" was written in a period in Accompanying his dad on a show tour of his life when he himself contemplated joining the ranks of OFWs.

In the late '90s, he said, he seriously thought of "trying it out for at least six months in the States, see if I can uproot

Last song

And he was not even that optimistic about making it to the US as a musician. "Maybe I can start it out over there as a 'floor manager' (somebody who mops the floor) or a McDonald's crew member," he recalled. He might have spoken in half-jest, but at that instant Valera-a prolific hitmaker in the '70s and '80s-sounded like any typical father with a growing family to support.

The next few years would see Valera holding shows for Filipinos in the United States, but his plans to work or settle there did not push through.

"I've realized that I still want my children to grow up in Filipano values," he said, referring to Valor, now 25; Clarisse, 17; Gretta, 22, and Valerie, 23. "Materially, we may be lacking here (in the Philippines), but over here we are still family oriented."

Questions for all

"I may have been frustrated with our country, but ultimately it's not about material things," he said.

"Panahon" was Valera's "last composition" for and about himself; He has written several more sungs over the past several years but these were for his children's debut album as the group "Salingket," their fiedgling attempt to follow their father's big footsteps in the music business.

With its provocative theme and lyrics, "Panahon" has never been released commercially in the scale of past Valera classics. It's hardly played on radio, but Valera has since made it part of his concert repertoire here or abroad. With each rendition of "Panahon," Pinoy fans more familiar with his romantic ballads would be in for a little jolt.

Valera hoped that the song can convey his personal view "that not just the government but all of us have a hand in what we have become today. This is for the next generation, explaining what we al. did in our time."

Why so many OFWs? Let Valor-and the rest of the youth-get an honest answer from an artist who minced no words, a father who worried about the future, and a Filipino who could still say "sana" (I hope) through it all.

Desperate husbands (and boyfriends, and other men)

By Isabel T. Escoda

THAT AMERICAN SONG FROM THE 1920s, "How're you going to keep 'em down in the farm after they've seen Pa-"ree?" could well be rewritten today thus: "How're you going to keep them down in the barrio after they've seen Hong Kong?" Some Filipino visitors entering the former British colony, now the SAR (China's "Special Administrative Region"), ostensibly as tourists, have over the years come in hopes of finding jobs. Many are so taken by Hong Kong—which proclaims itself "Asia's World City"—that the home coun-· try pales by comparison.

· Countless recruitment agencies have long been doing a roaring trade sending domestics to households around Asia, Europe, the US and the Middle East (the Saudi Arabian king, according to a recent story in Hong Kong, "has homes around the globe and an army of staff from the Philippines, India and Indonesia"). The exodus of Filipinas has meant that countless children (including infants) are left in the hands of caregivers. And quite a few husbands, boyfriends and brothers left behind tend to feel demoralized, even it's a trusm that the Philippine economy is being kept affoat by remittances from the migrant workers, with women comprising most of those who've gone to work abroad. It was Corazon Aquino, after all, who first proclaimed the women "the nation's heroes"—a label that's worn thin over the years, being a sop for those forced to leave in order to survive. It's small comfort to be told one is performing something heroic when your government mismanages the economy and does so little for you.

Going to Shenzhen

Estimates today show that of the roughly 2,000 Filipino migrants leaving two months, or a week or two. the country daily, 74 percent are women. The world apparently needs more housemaids and nannies than it does construction workers, seamen and drivers. The injury this does to Pinoy male pride has resuited in many broken marriages as well as misdemeanors, even crimes, at home.

But there are some lucky men who are extended lifelines by their womenfolk abroad. They get to visit their female relatives in Hong Kong who help them gain employment themselves. There are many instances where the domestics have either relative, or who have found other employ-

Those who cannot find employment for their husbands or other male relatives (it's much easier to place females) sometimes bring the men in as tourists. A wife can send a supporting letter for her husband to show at the Chinese Embassy in Manila stating that his wife has a valid contract and would like him to visit her briefly; he has to show a round-trip ticket. Upon obtaining a visa and arriving in Hong Kong, he is then at the mercy of the autport immigration official who decides how long a visa to grant. It may range from one to when the visa expires, his wife can ac pany him to the immigration department to plead for an extension, which are usually good for a week or two. After that, if the man wants to stay a bit longer, he can hop on a train and cross the border into Sherizhen in mainland China.

The trip takes only an hour and the tourist from Hong Kong can spend a few hours in Shenzhen before heading back. He can spend a few hours shopping for Luck plays a large role—a kindly official may grant an additional two weeks, but a suspicious one will give only a day or two, or even deport one back to Manila forthwith (if the passport shows multiple reentries, which produces suspicions of illegal em-

Male servants

This routine is fairly common among the domestics and their visiting male dependents. Two women who have brought over a husband and a boyfriend are Jenilyn and Lily. Jenilyn has worked for a Chinese family for seven years, leaving behind her jobless husband Bong and three children in Davao; while Lily left her Visayan barrio and her boyfriend Jun five years ago to work for a European businesswoman.

Jenilyn had occasionally asked her employers if any of their relatives needed a male servant. Luckily there was one who needed someone to help at a warehouse. But first they wanted to meet Bong, who arrived as a tourist (with all expenses paid by his wife). The interview turned out well, and Bong returned to Davao to wait to be summoned by the Chinese Embassy in Manila for his visa-all this took two Liby's boss is a European businesswoman who treats her like a family member.

Lily asked her to find Jun a job, but no one was interested in hiring a male. When her boss left for Europe once, she suggested Lily invite her boyfriend as a tourist so they could spend time together. Jun, who helps his parents eke out a living in their small Samar farm, was grateful to receive a ticket from Lity, but she was unable to find him an employer.

When his visa was expiring, she accompanied him to Shenzhen where he got an extension that let him stay longer (and earn a bit of money working part time—which is actually illegal). He soon had to leave, but he was grateful for the chance to see a place like Hong Kong which put Bohol in the shade for him.

Once back in his barno, he returned to exchanging text messages with his sweet-

I was already enjoying it here. But, of course, the question that echoed loudly in my head was: "Am I ready to join the boat? Is my body fit for sea? Are all my training enough?"

Finally, our agent arrived. "The boat is here," he said.

It only took us five minutes to reach the port. "Andito na kamif" one of our com-

I recovered a day later but Pedro was still down for a couple more days.

Tatay told us: "Ito ang buhay marino. Bınabayaran ka sa alon hindi sa trabaho. Ang trabaho madah lang!"

I instantly realized how true Tatay's words were. I didn't hear stories about how strong the waves are from those who encouraged me to take this job!

Their stories were all wonderful-gimmicks and night outs when they are at shore, getting to know people from other countries, and how parties last all might

But they said nothing about strong and big waves!

I also found out that one of the hardest things to do in a boat is to wake up for work and to go to sleep. The waves simply kept on waking us up.

But as the days went by Pedro and I learned to adjust to our new lives at sea. I also learned to use lemon for singuing and anchovies for pinakbet. These, of course, make our all-time favorite dishes lose their authentic flavor but in the middle of the ocean, one can't be choosy with the ingredients. Our Canadian colleagues love the chicheron Tatay and I make out of chicken skin. They even dip it in sukang may sali, paminte, and bowang. On the other hand, my fellow Pinoys here have had enough it's been three months now and I'm halfway through my contract.

I'm enjoying my work as well as the company of the American, Canadians, Russian, and of course, Filipmo seamen.

I have learned that being an OFW is more than just earning dollars. It is also so much about literally discovering the world and living in a global village.

My Russian friend wants to learn Tagalog so I had my parents send over a Filipino dictionary. One of our Canadian friends has grown so fond of "pusoy" that at night, he would bang on our rooms and shout: "Laro nai Pusoy nai"

I've been to the Raikland Islands where 12 Pilipinos work and live with their British spouses. I've also been near the South Pole where I saw a school of dol-

A veteran Pinoy colleague also cold me that the new generation of OFWs is actually very lucky. When they used to wait for letters from their loved ones, hoping that their relatives would send pictures too, now there's the Internet where one can email and chat with one's family at home as well as talk to them via the web cam and VSAT phones. For recreation, there's a DVD player with home theater speak-

Certainly, it is hard being in the middle of this vast ocean almost all the time. I still would rather work in the Philippines and build my dreams there.

But just recently, another Filipino had arrived as a seismic observer. He is a 26year-old college professor with a young family to feed. The salary he earned back home was obviously not enough. Again the realities of life in the Philippines reminded me that in my hands, and in those of my fellow OPWs, is the opporminity to have better lives and a more financially secure future. And now I think, as I wind up this story in our sturdy little boat, being an OFW is not so bad after all. It could even become my lifetime career.

Aussie miners within meters of rescue

BEACONSFIELD. Australia -- The effort to free two Australian gold miners trapped underground for 11 days entered its most delicate—and dangerous—phase on Saturday, as rescuers completed work using a grant drill and prepared to cut the last few meters of an escape tunnel by hand. Matthew Gill, manager of the Beaconsfield Gold Mine said rescuers were now within 3 meters of Brant Webb, 37, and Todd Russell, 34, and had finished boring through solid rock with a giant drilling machine. Officials have indicated it is likely the men will have to spend another right underground.

Suharto still bleeding

SUHARTO

JAKARTA, Indonesia—Former Indonesian dictator Subarto's condition remained unstable Saturday due to "dangerous" intestinal bleeding, two days after being rushed to hospital, one of his doctors said. The bleeding has reduced the levels of hemoglobin, or red blood cells, carrying oxygen to the 84-year-old Suharto's brain, heart, iddneys and lungs, said Dr. Joko Paharjo, one of 20 specialists monitoring the former leader's condition. "We are worried about the lack of oxygen," Raharjo told reporters. "The bleeding at his old age is dangerous." Suharto was admitted to Pertamina Hospital in the capital, Jakarta, on Thursday evening after complaining of feeling weak. He also was having problems swallowing food, doc-

Singaporeans vote in general election

SINGAPORE—Singaporeans cast their votes Saturday in a general election seen as a referendum on Prime Minister Lee Histen Loung, who was seeking his first mandate as head of government against a rejuvenated opposition. After an occasionally virutent campaign, some 1.2 million voters in the politically regimented city-state were eligible to cast their ballots for 47 contested seats from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. Results were expected by late Saturday. The right-wing People's Action Party (PAP), in power since 1959, has already won 37 uncontested seats and needs just six more to form the majority in the 84-seat legislature. It held all but two of the seals in the former British colony's last parliament.

Caire told AFP French officials have been inspired by British success in London in using a video monitoring system to identify the attackers in the London underground.

Such a system would in Paris film all passengers and would re-

Mayol loses title bid via decision

TOKYO-RODEL MAYOL STARTED OUT sharp and strong but faded rapidly against Eagle Kyowa in the later rounds to lose his first bout in 23 fights and drop his bid for the WBC minimum closing rounds to fail in his attempt to become the country's lone world champion.

WASHINGTON-WITH HIS TEAM down by one in the last 15 seconds, Cleveland Cavaliers star LeBron James approached the Wizards' Gilbert Arenas, who was on the stripe trying to add to Washington's one-point lead.

"It is all about opportunities," Jones said. "I told these guys it is going to be a long game. They double teammed LeBron (James) and I was wide open. Thank God it went in."

CLEVELAND'S LeBron James (right) talks to Washington's Gilbert Arenas before the latter's crucial free throw.

"It took me two years to get to to Hughes, who supped it to Jones get here and I didn't want to come here and just be happy to get into the playoffs," James said.

Larry Hughes took the inbounds pass and quickly got the ball to James, who was immediately double-teamed by the Jared Jeffenes and Arenas.

Sensing the pressure, James passed the ball on the right sideline for the clutch jumper.

Without any timeouts, the Wizards raced the ball upcourt and got a good look, but Caron Butler's 3pointer from the right wing hit the front of the rim.

Cleveland had a 107-104 advantage in regulation after Murray sank two free throws with 9.9 seconds remaining.

Arenas, who finished with 36 points on 14-of-27 shooting, had the ball stripped out of his hands and out of bounds after racing up the court. However, he caught the ensuing inbounds more than seven feet behind the 3-point line and sank the shot to force overtime.

'Dog-trained' Ronaldinho has World Cup's spotlight focused on him

SAO PAULO, BRAZIL—HE LEARNED HIS first moves with the help of a mixed-breed dog named Bombom. Today he is the best soccer player in the world, praised by Pele and Diego Maradona.

All eyes will be on Ronaldinho when the 2006 World Cup begins next month.

No other player will attract as much attention as the Brazilian midfielder during the monthlong tournament in Germany-thanks to his nifty skills and dazzing moves. And to

"He loved to play with me," Ronaldinbo said. "When all my friends got bored, I would go play with him.

"We would stay battling for the ball all day. I had to work hard on my moves to keep him from getting the ball."

Bombom—and a soccer ball—were by Ronaldinho's side at all times as he grew up in a poor family in the southern Brazilian city of Porto Alegre, at a time when he didn't even dream of playing in a World Cup.

"We were inseparable, he was my great contoanion," Ronaldmho said of Bombom, which means "chocolate candy" in Portuguese. And when Bombom wasn't available,

Ronaldinho would find other opponents to test

"When it was raining, I would stay inside the house dribbling past chairs and tables," he said. "I always spent most of my time as a kid with a soccer ball. That helped me become good at it."

New 26 and in his prime, Ronaldinho will enter the World Cup as the tournament's biggest star.

He has won the last two Fifa player of the year awards, and has led PC Barcelona to two consecutive Spanish league titles and to the Champions League final.

Few dispute his starus at the best player in Ronaldinho enchants everyone with his impressive skulls and nifty tricks—from the nolook pass to the "elastic" dribble, in which he fakes moving the ball in one direction and suddenly pulls it back the other way.

"I'm always trying to invent new things," he said recently. "But my goal is to win the World Cup again, I really don't care about giving a show or scoring a lot of goals."

Ronaldinho will be the focal point as Brazil goes for a second straight world title—and sixth overall. No other country has more than three.

He was a member of the squad that won the 2002 World Cup in Japan and South Korea, playing five marches and scraing two goals. AP

Kin bid Earl Woods g'bye

ANAHEIM, CALIFORNIA—FRIENDS AND relatives came to the Tiger Woods Learning Center on Friday to privately remember Earl Woods, the golf star's father who died this week after a long bartle with prostate cancer.

Earl Woods was best known for the impact he had on his son, who began hitting balls at age 3 after watching his father practice his swing in the family's garage. He died on Wednesday at his Cypress home. He was 74.

Mourness arrived at the memorial and reception after the burial at a cemetery in Cypress. Those who came included NBA great Charles Barkley, US PGA Tour commissioner Tim Finchem, Nike chair Phil Knight, US volleyball player and model Gabrielle Reece and her husband, pro surfer Laird Hamilton.

Earl Woods, who was more determined to raise a good son than a great golfer, was the driving force behind Tiger Woods' phenomenal career.

Schumacher: I need help against Alonso

NUERBURGRING, GERMANY-JUST winning Sunday's European Grand Prix will not be enough for Michael Schumacher, he would like some help from other drivers to catch championship leader Fernando Alonso.

wish there would be a few other drivers up there fighting to win at the moment who could take some important points away.

"But it doesn't look like this is the case," the 37-year-old German told reporters on Friday.

Schumacher won last month's San Marino Grand Prix ahead of Alonso to make up two points on the Spaniard but at that pace it would take him eight victories to catch Renault's championship leader. There are 14 races left.

"I'm reasonably happy with the car," said Schumacher, who finished behind Alonso in Friday's afternoon practice.

"It looks like we'll be competitive. If we get everything 100 percent right, I think we've got a chance (to win)," the seven-times champion added." Alexander Wurz was fastest in both Foday's sessions for Williams, but the Austrian test driver will not race on Sunday.

Alonso has finished in the top two in all grands prix so far this season. Reuters

De La Hoya ready for match vs 'nuttiest' foe

Oscar De La Hoya during the weigh-in.

LAS VEGAS—RICARDO MAYORGA SMOKES cigarettes in the ring after particularly satisfying victories. "El Matador" wears a bullifighting outlit before his fights, and he revels in insulting his opponents' families, challenging their edinicities and questioning their sexual orientations.

In short, the former Nicaraguan gang member is one of the numest men in a profoundly irrational profession. And he has little in common with Oscar De La Hoys, the cultured epitome of businesslike fisticulfs—except a desire for a career-revitalizing win when they meet in Las Vegas on Saturday

De La Hoya seems eager to be back in the boxing ring after a 20-month absence since his runthround knockout loss to Bernard Hopkins to September 2004. The Golden Boy has nothing left to accomplish in a long, frequently spectacular career, but he seems determined to fight at least two more times before devoting himself ful-by to his myriad interests outside the ring. So why would De La Hoya risk his health and reputation against Mayorga, of all people? Perhaps it's exactly because Mayorga is just the type of fighter who would insult De La Hoya's wife and Latino heritage, filling any motivational gaps for a fighter who's already done everything. "He's done his job already," De La Hoya said.

"He's made me train already as hard as I can. He's motivated me already to be the best fighter i can be, so there's no way I can fall in whatever kind of trap he's trying to set for me.

"I already have my plan of attack. I already have my game plan set, so whatever little games he's trying to play, he can't play them with me."

De La Hoya (37-4, 29 KOs) has maintained his sterling career and a largely unbientished face by avoiding any of the flat-out brawls that take their toll on any fighter. De La Hoya says he'll stand toe-to-toe with Mayorga (28-5-1, 23 KOs) at the MGM Grand, trading power punches for the WBC light middleweight title.

KRANNA REEVES, BIG WINNER IN THE celebrity edition of the reality series "Pinoy Big Brother," is the latest star to be disciplined by the Movie and Television Review and Classification Board (MTRCB).

Reeves was censured because of a joke she had cracked on ABS-CBN's Sunday afternoon show biz gab fest, "The Buzz" aired April 16.

Known for her malapropisms (for example, "KFC" for "KSP"), Reeves, during the "Buzz" interview, recounted an error she had made in the "PBB" house: Insread of, "It's your loss," she said "It yours."

mistake," "My Reeves told Inquirer Entertainment on Friday, "was that I translated it literally to Tagalog... eat yours or kamin mo ang sarih mo. I didn't realize it had double meaning because I'm Cebuana "

Hearing

On April 26, Marissa Laguardia, MTRCB chair, issued a "notice of hearing" addressed to Ma. Socorro Vidanes, network senior vice president for Television Production.

Laguardia's memo stated that Reeves yours'] is not fit for television viewing... a prima facie violation of Presidential Decree No. 1986 and Implementing Rules and Regulations."

The memo required the respondents (Reeves and ABS-CBN representatives) to attend a meeting of MTRCB's Hearing and Adjudication Committee on May 3.

Reeves attended the hearing accompanied by represenratives from ABS-CBN and Backroom Inc., her management company.

Instead of the expected suspension, Reeves just got a reprimand and was instructed to "exercise care in her language, actions and manner of dressing."

Apology

"suspension" would have meant Reeves, who has no regular show at the moment, wouldn't be allowed to guest on TV. Reeves recounted: "I told the MTRCB, Ano na ang kakatnin ko?' [What will I eat?] They laughed because we were back where we started: The topic of eating! I guess, they took pity on me." "They heard our side," Abunda, Reeves' manager, said "Chair Laguardia told me that I should be more conscious [of the fact] that I'm new popular and that my behavior might be imirated by viewers, young Reeves owned up.

But Reeves wasn't entirely treated with kid gloves, Abunda said. She's required to make "a public apology."

This was indicated in ABS-CBN's official response, contained

In Mega it's still

GMA 7 protests claim that is top in Metro. Actually,

By Nin| Valera and Bayani San Diego Jr.

GMA 7'S PRIMETIME NEWS PROgram "24 Oras" is No. 1 in Mega Manila, according to surveys conducted by AGB-Nielsen from April 1 to 28, 2006.

The Kapuso network's "24 Oras" posted an average 25.6 percent against ABS-CBN's "TV Patrol," average of 20.48 percent in the same period.

This data was supplied by GMA 7 in reaction to statements made by top executives of ABS-CBN's news and current affairs division in an Inquire story (May 3) that the latter's "TV Patrol" had been 'posting good ratings over '24 Oras' in Metro Manila."

Contradiction?

There is little contradiction here, actually

Luchi Cruz-Valdes, head of ABS-CBN'S Current Affairs, claimed in the previous story that "TV Patrol" had topped the ratings in Metro Manila three out of five days last month

The network had cited, as proof of the trend, AGB-Nielsen surveys conducted in Metro Manila from April 19 to 21 that showed "TV Patrol" bested "24 Oras" (over the three inclusive days-21.1 vs 19.9 percent; 24.3 vs 21.8; and 21.6 vs 21.5)

Valdes said. "If you get the average (number of 'winning' days in the whole month), we're no. 1 in Metro."

GMA 7 executives protested thus, say ing Metro Manila ratings was only part of the whole picture.

In a statement sent to INQUIRER Wednesday, GMA Marketing and Productions Inc. president Manuel Quiogue said Mega Manila-and not Metro Manila—ratings data were the accepted figures in terms of research evaluations and chent presentations.

Quiogue was apparently referring to how advertising agencies determine the shows in which to place commercial

"Very few clients look at the Metro Manila ratings because Mega Manila represents one major market, and not a collection of many markets," Quiogue said in the statement. "Thus, breaking down the ratings into Metro Manua and Suburbs is not generally done."

Butch Raquel, head of GMA 7's Cor porate Communications, e-mailed to Ir ourses the AGB-Nielsen ratings resultshowing that the "weighted" average (measuring actual percentage lead, ... opposed to average based on number of days) showed "24 Oras" was leading in Mega Manila and Suburbs by a wide margin.

Raquel pointed out: "In Mega Manil 1 25.6 vs 20.5; Suburbs, 29.8 vs 16.8." In Metro Manila, the April results to flected a close race "24 Oras," 23.5 v-

"I know that I won't turn into a same overnight, but I really want to be a good person," said Reeves, who had just un dergone a medical procedure to pump up her behind.

In an e-matied statement, Raquel explained further "Metro Manila rat-ings., shows that TV Patro? won over '24 Oras' only five times over a period of four weeks of April and three of these wins were less than one rating point."

In an earlier interview, Maria Ressa, senior vice president and head of News and Current Affairs made clear her position: "It's a long way to go in Mega Mani-

But she considered Metro Manila fig-ures "significant," she said, because Metro comprised 70 percent of Mega Manila ratings (the remaining 30 percent is the Suburbs)

The numbers fluctuate every day, but it's healthy competition, as far as Ressa is concerned

"It's [non-productive] to get into fighting matches," she said. "What's more important is to focus on better programming. Ratings [can be] deceptive. A prime time news shows' performance is affected by pre-programming and post-programming (shows that come before and after), which change often."

What is constant, Ressa pointed out, is the viewers' trust.

"According to Pulse Asia's latest survey, ABS-CBN now has the highest credib hty rating (68 percent as opposed to GMA's 60)," she said. "[For me] it's a sign we re on the right path. That's what I tell our reporters."

This aspect is also disputed by GMA. Raquel's statement concluded "[The AGB-Nielsen] Ratings also show that GMA News is the preferred news source during significant events such as the May 1 Labor Day coverage, Marine Headquarters Stand off last Feb 26, the Feb. 24 State of National Emergency Declaration, the landshide in Southern Leyte, and the events related o the 'Hello Garci' controversy last

Commercials

And reiterating Qu'ogue's point, Raquel stressed, "Advertisers look at Mega Manda ratings in determining [commercial p.acements]."

Rey Mendoza, an advertising executive, confirmed this. He said advertisers usually booked ads in top-rating shows even if creative media buys also looked at programs with niche markets

"The image of the show is also important," Mendoza said, "not only the numbers." Echoing Ressa, Mendoza added that the Metro was a "very important" market," since it represented 70 percent of Mega Manila. "In fact," he said, "some clients only look at Metro Manna as the market for their products, [although] this does not mean that clients should agnore the total market."

Young boys

"I can't help it if young boys fall for me," she jested. Turning serious, Ai-Ai said the secret to their happy relationship is patience and understanding.

"A lot of patience," she stressed. "He's young, so I have to explain a lot of things to him. He's also a private person. He doesn't even like his photos taken when he's with me."

Last month, stolen shots of Ai-Ai and Jun while on vacation in Boracay

Ai-Ai was married to singer Miguel were published in a show biz magazane. She said this had upset them.

"I didn't like the picture because I was not pretty in it," she loked. "Jun couldn't imagine how the photograph was taken. I had to explain to him about the paparazzi "

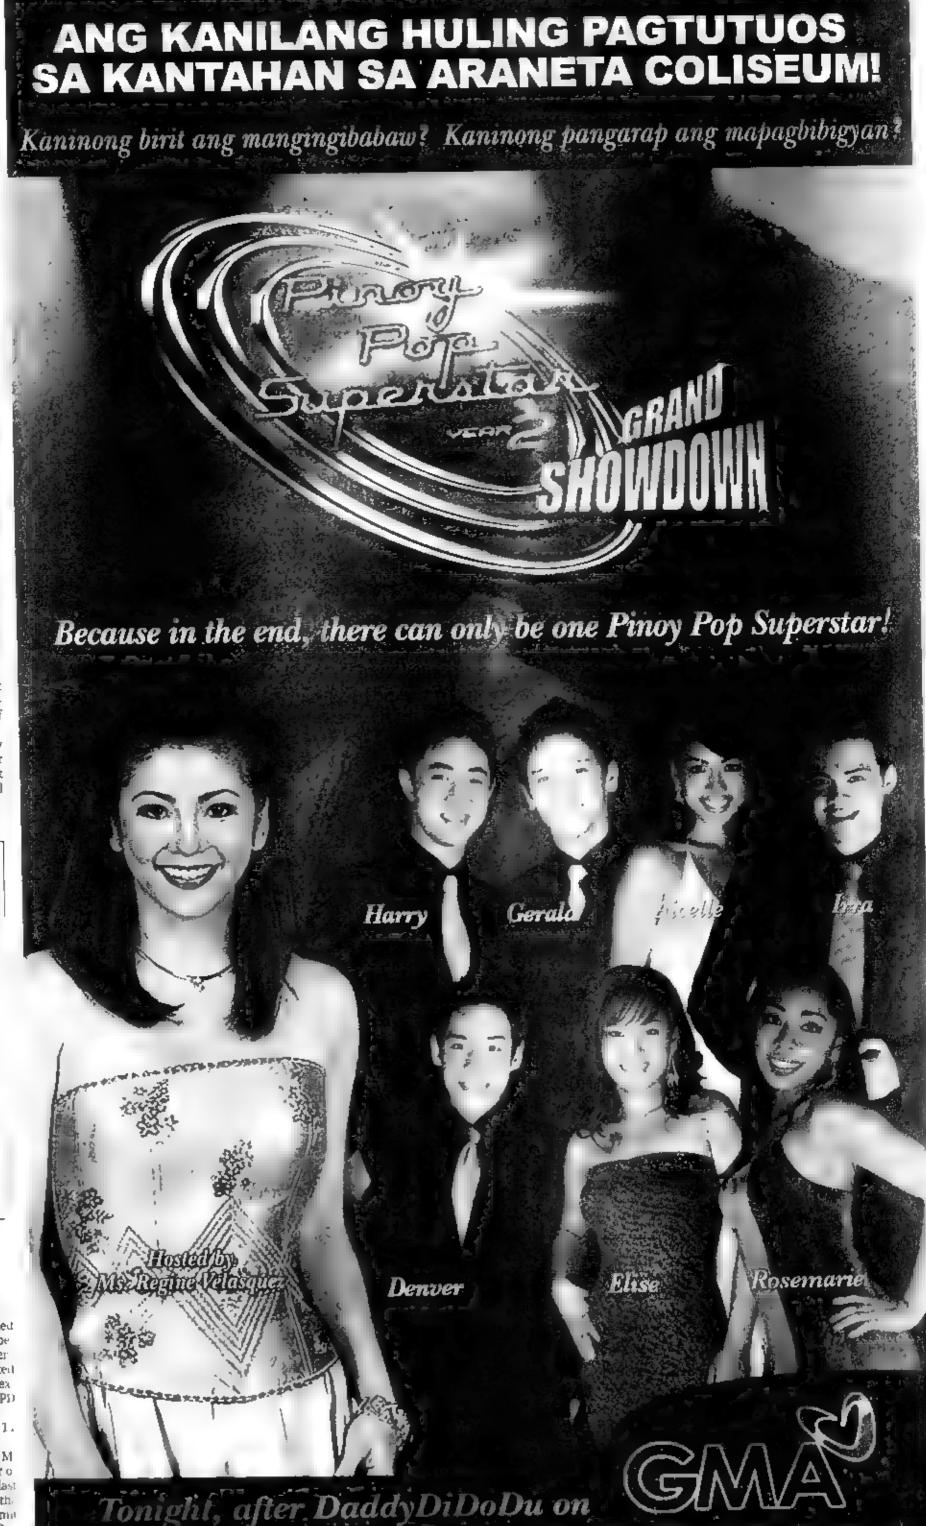

At-Ai and Jun met on the badminton court about three years ago but she said they started dating only six months ago.

"We were friends first," she said. "His mother is also a good friend of mine. His family knows me already. No one has objected that we're seeing each other."

in a phone interview with In-QUIRZR, Abunda described Jun as a very mee and decent guy. 'I like him," he said.

The wedding will most likely take place next year, said Ai-Ai.

How Christian Bautista thrills girlfriend Rachelle Ann Go

I CORNERED RACHELLE ANN GO FOR KILIG lovento about her boyfmend Christian Bautista. She rambled as any lovestruck girl would: "He gave me a CD of our pies. It's a stide show with a message in every shot. He also gave me a compilation of songs and a long letter explaining why each song reminds him of me. We had a memorable time in Vegas after our concert tour but, nope, we didn't have a Vegas wedding ha? Our theme song is "You" by Basil Valdez." So Rachellle Ann & Christian don't rust sing about love après tout, huh? Amour... they duet and do it!

Of a course the new project has the go-signal of her hubby, Buboy (Cesar Montano). She gushed "I'm so excited 'cause it will be with Ate Maricel Soriano. It's entitled 'inang Yaya.' Ate Mana plays the yaya of my hid. Buboy's conditions are, pack up before midnight, no shooting on Sundays and no kissing scenes!" Even sans sexy scenes, Mrs. Cesar Montano is sure to shane, shane, shane onscreen!

Dreyluss trumps co-stars Lucas and Rossum to put you in the mood for watching a movie about a ship that turns upside down after a huge wave hits it, than a dinner cruise aboard a yacht.

Warner Bros. did just that. They hosted a sunset cruise in Marina del Rey before we watched "Poseidon," a zemake of that popcorn movie "The Poseidon Adventure," a huge hit in 1972. (To exaggerate how long it ONLY !N has been since he watched a movie inside HOLLYWOOD a theater, my San Francisco-based brother Alex loves to toke that the last film he saw was The Poseidon Adven-(".eun

The day after the cruise, we sat down to interview eight, yes eight, people from the movie-director Wolfgang Petersen, Kurt

JOSH Lucas

Russell, Richard Dreyfuss, Josh Lucas, Emmy Rossum, Jacinda Barrett, Mia Maestro and Mike Vogel. That meant spending virtually a whole day at the Regent Beverly Wilshire. It was enough to make you pump the ship, so to speak, if you are not so ladined to hear the stars drone about their mishaps or nearmishaps while shooting in a football field-sized water rank.

Ruben V.

Nepales

Fortunately, each of the eight talents offered some memorable moments. But Richard trumped them all without meaning to with his wit and irreverent humor.

Emmy, who seems to look lovelier each time we see her (she was a painterly vision in a Raiph Lauren dress, flowing curty locks and all), announced with great fanfare at the start of our press con with her. "I want you to know that I'm a woman of my word. The last time I sat down with you for Phantom of the Opera,' I promised I would bring you crème brûsée, which I am famous for I have brought it for you today and it's coming in right from the back. I orchestrated the whole thing."

With those words, a couple of the hotel's staff rolled in a cart, covered in white linen, carrying the creamy dessert.

Playing hooky

Asked about her studies at Columbia University the normally poised Emmy stuck out a tongue like a child caught playing, well, hooky "I'm playing hooky right now .1 haven't attended a class in about six months. I'm working on my record right now but I'm hoping to go back to school at some point. I want to major in English with a minor either in art history or philosophy."

Other interesting quotes from the 19-year-old

When I first met Woifgang, he didn't even ask if I could swim (laughter) and then after he cast me, he was like, 'Off to your scuba diving trainingl' and I was like, What part of this equation did I miss?' The training was pretty strentious, especially given the fact that I had never scuba dived before. On the first day, they introduced me to this apparatus that they called the cage of death. I went, 'Can't we call it the cage of life? Let's be a litde bit more optimistic. It was this very large plexiglass box that they would place over my head very slowly while we were underwater.

"I would take my last breath before my head was completely encased in the box. A group of safery divers would surround me. I would have to hold my breath as long as I could and then give them the sign when I was running out of air and then swim to the top. It was pretty stary. But nothing could have prepared me for the running, jumping, falling, screaming, bleeding and bruising that turned out to be part of the film."

The other day, I had a guy in the mall come up

LOS ANGELES—THERE IS NO BETTER WAY to me and tell me he loved 'Phantom of the Opera' and then he proposed to me (laughter) I told him I didn't feel like I knew him well enough to say yes (laughter)."

"I've found that guys have been somewhat shy to ask me out. I used to be really shy to ask guys out. Now I'm starting to get less shy (laughter) because I realized that I have to do it sometimes-step up to the plate and be brave. The guys that I tend to date are students, or they are as the first two years of their careers. I don't think they're really intimidated because when people get to know me, they realize that I'm pretty normal. I mean, the things that I like to do are pretty normal, like going to the movies and concerts. I'm going to see Madonna's concert in a few weeks. I went to the Black Eyed Peas show because Pergie was in the movie. I went to see David Gray a few weeks ago."

"I spend about half of the year in New York because I travel a lot. I'm making my album here so I'm back and forth between LA and New York. I still live with my mom in the same apartment that I grew up in. We don't have a housekeeper. I do my own laundry. I make my own bed. I don't really get special treatment. I grew up with a single mom. She's my inspiration. As a photographer, she has been all over the world, hanging out of helicopters in Bahram photographing oil rigs. She has led an unconventional, adventurous life. I get some of my artistic inclinations and energy from her."

Josh Lucas, whom we will grudgingly describe (my wife James said after the screening that even when Josh is drowning, he still looks "not") as the handsomest Hollywood actor today, narrated how he almost irowned: "It was a moment of genuine panic in my life. I was actually thinking, I'm going to die making a movie (laughing). It was a very uncomfortable feeling. What happened was, the second they yelled action, I was supposed to go under, swim toward Jacinda, As 1 went under there was a body (a prop) being held by a wire. The wire caught on my belt and pulled me under because there was suction coming from these water cannons that were creating this water movement.

"As I got pulled down, I didn't think much of it for a second. But then I realized suddenly that I was stuck and I couldn't get up. No one could see me. The cameras couldn't see me because there was too much going on in the water. I went into full panic. I was trying to rip my clothing to get out of this thing but the more I twirled, the more I got caught up in this wire. Finally, I got out of a and swam out.

"I got very very angry. On the couple of times in my life that I've particked, what happened was this rage comes out, it's the survival instinct, I suppose, I am not someone who loses his temper very often but I got very angry at Wolfgang. The amazing thing about him is that he managed not only to instantly calm me down but instantly get me back to do it again (laughter) so there must be some brilliant manipulative mind there that I don't quite understand."

More from Josh:

times in my life was when I was really broke. Five years ago, the day before I got a role in 'A Beautiful Mind,' I was with my garlfriend. We went to the bank and I couldn't get money out because

I only had $19. You had to keep a minimum balance of $20.

So we went back to the house and we took all of our quarters.

There was a moment

"One of the hardest

Veteran star had the best stories to tell at press cons for this latest 'Poseidon' remake

when the two of us looked at each other and I thought, God, I've been working in this business for more than 10 years and I only have $19 m the bank. I just felt sick and I remember just looking at her and thinking. I can't even take her out to dinner... we can't even buy a beer tonight. It was really a bad feeling. It was really interesting that the next day I got offered 'A Beautiful Mind."

Most enjoyable interview

Leave it to the most senior in the cast, Richard, to give the most emoyable interview. Silver-haired now, with a balding pare, Richard-who married wife no. 3 just last March (Svetlana Brokhin, a Russian)-gave answers that matched the youthful, mischievous glint in his eyes. He even stood up to do his version of a German dance while talking about Wolfgang. Below are excerpts of our interview with the 1977 Oscar Best Actor for "The Goodbye Girl."

You look good-complexion and everything for your age.

It's also due to the self-tanning stuff (laughter).

Many actors are going for cosmetic surgery.

I'll tell you the truth. If I'm 95 years old, on life support at Cedars-Sinai (Hospital) and someone tells me that they've perfected the hair (graft) thing so that it doesn't look fake, I'll do it (laughter). I believe in anything science has to offer that es you feel good. It's one thing to walk around and look like you're from Pluto (he stretched and contorted his face) but I believe in anything that science has to offer. Why not? A hundred years from now we're all going to walk around with perfect ahs and long penses (laughter).

There was no big deal made about your character being gay, It's just casually referred in. Can you talk about the significance of this?

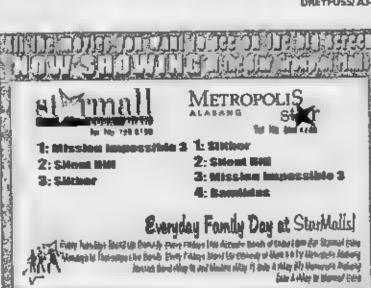

The decision for the character to be gay preceded my involvement. I thought it was very interesting thing, it's not revolutionary. It doesn't change the world but it's a good thing. Make him gay-solitary, middle-aged gay, hearthroken. As an actor, I thought that was great. It's less controversial perhaps than it might be and too bad because that would bring a bigger audience (laugh-

Kurt Russell's character could have told your character, "I wish I knew how to quit you" (the memorable line from "Brokeback Mountain").

Why I didn't fall in love with Kurt is the question (laughter). I was so busy looking at that little Italian bus boy that I should have (laughter) had a long-term relationship with the Mayor (Kurt's character). I got a letter from this gay actor organization congrarulating and thanking me for playing this role. They sent me a gift which was a triple X-rated gay porn with a box (laughter). I took it out and-whoa, whoa, whoa (laughter)! It was Part 2. It did open my horizons a little bit but I thought that was furthy.

The back stories explaining your character and those of the other cast members were cut.

I was in favor of making this a silent film (laughter). What I mean is, there is not a line of dialogue in this movie that you have to hear. This DREYPUSS/ A3-8

Now that "Idol" is down to four contenders, it should be easier to answer this question. Who do you think will win?

You probably hear this all the time-i've no idea. America has been so tricky this year.

You changed your look from week to week. What impact do you think it had on the voters?

I think what happened was, everyone wanted to place me in this teenage light and not allow me to grow up. Whatever it was, I'm very happy because now I can... just venture into what this has built for me.

How do you feel about that? It doesn't bother me. I'm just a litthe girl with an old spart. I love Gladys Knight I love all the old, old, old people that just had the great music in them. Every time they said that. I was more and more motivated because that's who I am. I'm glad they finally figured that out.

What were you thinking when you put your gum in Ryan Seacrest's hand?

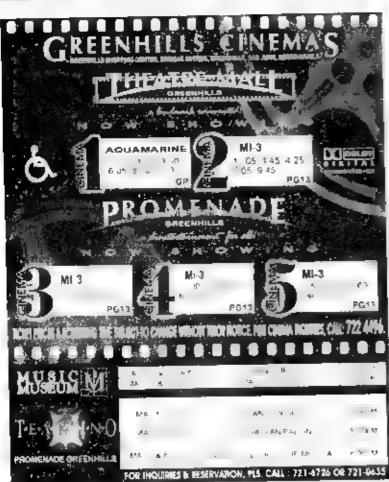

Well, I had just sang the group song. When we sat down, I put a gum in my mouth because I always have a piece of gum at the roof of my mouth. But since I had just chewed it, it wasn't ready to lay at the top of my mouth. When Ryan said, "Paris, you're going to sing," I said, okay, whatever He held out his hand and I said, "Ryan, you want to hold this for me?" I just gave it to him, and I was ready to sing. That's just to show America that I'm ready for anything Your singing voice is so different at any given moment. I'L never be caught off guard.

Philippine show biz goes global

MOST OF THE TIME, FILIPINO SHOW BIZ people "thank local," gearing their productions to audiences here. This is a market-specific thrust that gives those shows focus and identity, but it also results in a sense of insularity and lack of ambition and sophistication.

But there have been occasional exceptions to this desultory rule—in the 1950s some Filipino movies were shot abroad, like "Pitong Gabi sa Paris," and decades later, superstar Nora Annor filmed biockbusters like "Lolipops and Roses at Burong Talangka" and "Blue Hawaii" in the States.

in the States.

These productions were popular with local viewers because they gave them something different and visually special. And, set's face it, they also tapped into Pinoy's "deathiess" colonist mentality, which makes them think that "foreign" is inherently better than "local".

Fast forward to 2006, and it's instructive to see that this occasional interest in foreign locales has become much more pervasive, and has expanded from a simple touristic thrust to a major business approach that can only grow stronger from year to year.

Now that the movies have been upstaged by telegration as the movie influential and popular.

Now that the movies have been upstaged by television as the most influential and popular medium in the country, it's TV that's leading the way in making the industry's growing global thrust a key financial lanchpin for our leading net works.

The important shift has been in regarding Filipinos living and working abroad as a major new market that's tipe for the picking—and servicing.

Being Pinoys, they're homesick and hungry for a connection with their homeland, and our TV networks have been only too happy to oblige with The Filipino Channel and other astute gambits.

In addition, even as the networks buy up a lot of Asian telenovelus for local showing, they're also starting to sell their own dramatic productions to other countries

Most recently, Marvin Agustin and Jolina Magdangal went to the States to shoot their new tetesetye, "I Love New York," and the series will start telecasting May 15 on GMA 7. If it chicks with viewers, it could usher in a new wave of local productions shot abroad.

Other gambits include the many pop-musical shows that local artists stage all over the world. And, in the field of theater, Monique Wilson's New Voice Company is currently performing its productions of "Aspects of Love" in Singapore.

These individual moves aren't new, but what is significant is that they're working in tandem to-day, so their impact has become truly noteworthy.

Aside from the extra income that these outward-looking unitatives provide, they also suggest that the national mind-set is finally expanding beyond its traditionally insular confines, and that's a good thing. On the other hand, this could also exacerbate our colonial mentality, so we have to guard against that negative tendency and consequence. In general, however, we welcome Filipmo entertainment workers' renewed global thrust, for the financial, cultural and psychological advantages it could engender.

THE SENSODYNE Coal Gel "Halo-Halo Festival" is set 2 to 7 p.m. today at the Market! Market! Central Plaza at the Bonfacio Global City in Taging. The "cool" event launches Sensodyne's new mint-flavored desensitizing toothpaste, and the Sensodyne Chill Gimmick Card, a loyalty card for seed dessert lovers.

Feedback

FROM Ed R. Corrales of Malari City: "I watched the show 'Gospel of Judas,' but it did not detail what the old document contained, so it was difficult for me to evaluate its message. How can we get hold of the translation?"

We have received these excerpts from the National Geographic Channel: "The Gospel of Judas" text begins, "The secret account of the revelation that Jesus spoke in conversation with Judas Iscariot during a week, three days before he celebrated Passover." It reflects themes that scholars regard as being consistent with Gnostic traditions. In the first scene, Jesus laughs at his disciplines for praying to "your God" meaning the Old Testament God who created the world. He challenges them to look at him and understand what he really is, but they turn away.

"The key passage comes when Jesus tells Judas,"... you will exceed all of them. For you will sacrifice the man who dothes me."

Judas is signed out for singled out for special status: 'Step away from the others and I shall tell you the mysterious of the kingdom. It is possible for you to reach it, but you will grieve a great deal.' Jesus says. He also tells Judas, Look, you have been told everything. Lift up your eyes and look at the cloud and the light wathen it, and the stars surrounding it. The star that leads the way is your star.

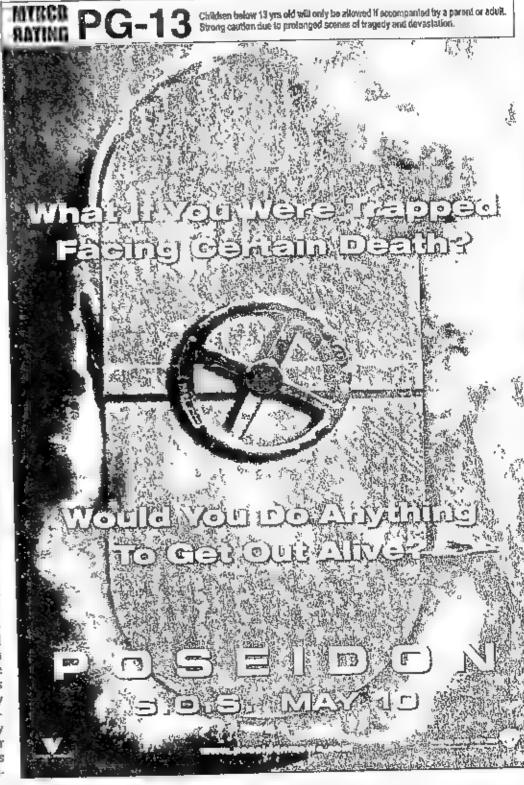

"The gospel also suggests Judas will be despised by the other disciples, but will be exalted over them: "... You will be cursed by the other generations and you will otime to rule over them.

"The gospel ends abruptly: They (the arresting party) approved Judas and said to hum, What are you doing here? You are Jesus' disciple. Judas answered them as they wished. And, he received some money and handed him over to them. No memion is made of Jesus' crucifiz-

OLLOWING THE LEAD OF DISney-Pixar, which uses the voices of popular Hollywood actors to dub Japanese animé features like "Spartted Away" and "Princess Mononoke" into English, local cable channel Hero now does the same for "Voltes V," perhaps the most famous Japanese robot series ever to be shown on Philippine television.

In the late '70s, "Voltes V" became a TV phenomenon when it premiered on free TV GMA 7's version used Filiputo voice talents speaking in English to bring the tale of robots, heroic brothers, and feuding balf-REVIEW brothers to life.

Now, more than 20 years later, Hero is re-releasing the show in Filipino with a celebrity voice cast. In the lineup are Dennis Trillo, Joseph Bitangcol, Sandara Park, Michael de Mesa, Nikki Valdez, Richie Chan and many others. The folks at Hero are apparently hoping that our country's unflagging obsession with movie and TV stars will be the marketing gimmick which will entice a new generation of fans to watch a sword-wielding robot that had to defeat a new beast fighter from animated Little John opens his mouth. the planet Bozania every week. This new version (which also boasts of an - it's hard not to miss the distinctive in-all-new, simpler Filipino translation) has been dubbed—pun intended-"Voltes V: Evolution".

For the most part, the cast of "Voltes V: Evolution" does excellent work. As team leader Steve Armstrong, awardwinning actor Trillo brings a pitch-perfect mix of confidence and youthful conviction to the role. As Jamie, the lone female of the team, Park is also terrific. Her Korean-accented Filipino adds an immeasurable Asian flavor to the show, which was created in Japan. As the viliam Prince Zardoz, Bitangcol is sunably menacing and angry. Gone, however, is the haughty aristocratic demeanor of the character which fans heard in GMA's English version. Of course, it's no fault of Bitangcol's that it's hard or impossible to sound like an arrogant prince when you're speaking in Tagalog. The biggest improvement in this new celebrity version has to be the casting of child actor Igi Boy Flores as the pre-teen Little John, youngest member of the team. In the original "Voltes V," Little John was played by an adult who increased the pitch of his or her voice to sound like a child. In "Evolution," it's wonderful to hear the voice of a real little boy whenever the flections of actor Jonee Gamboa as Voltes V's white-haired co-creator, Doctor Smith. Alex Ageaodi plays Dr. Smith in "Evolution" wonderfully, but he's no Jonee Gamboa. But then again, who is?

Excellent as the new voice cast is,

Aged very well

In the 20-odd years since Pinoys were introduced to "Voltes V," the animated cartoon has aged very well-The timeless, emotional story of three brothers' search for their supposedly dead father, coupled with the spectacular action scenes involving mechanical monsters, was for an entire generation the first action adventure-sci fi soap opera. The animation remains impressive by TV standards, especially when one remembers that computer-assisted animation was a decade or so away when "Voltes V" was created in the '70s.

With its new star-studded cast and more conversational Filipino script, there's no doubt that "Evolution" will. allow a new generation of kids to see why their dads were addicted to this animated series. Now, all that remains is for the folks behind "Evolution" to translate the songs which begin and end the show into Filipino as well!

("Voltes V. Evolution" is shown on the Hero TV cable channel Saturdays and Sundays at 8 30 p.m.)

THE TEEN COMEDY "AQUAMARINE" harks back to the days of campy romances between humans and legendary beings in movies like "Splash" and "Date With an Angel." It's also a familiar story that's been remade and regurgitated in magic-oriented local films, where love unfailingly saves the day and is unmindful of all physical differences. REVIEW That tested formula is given a new spin in "Aquamarine," a silly, starry-eyed, and smartly written teen adventure that even older audiences can appreciate. The characters are also smart and emotionally aware teen girls that today's younger viewers can see themselves as, or feel for. These are best friends Halley (young pop singer JoJo Levesque) and Claire Roberts), who worry about their impending separation. They're spending the last few days of their summer vacation together, as Hailey and her mother need to relocate to Australia for a coveted job opportunity. The girls playfully and unintentionally invoke a magical solution to their woes. Enter the bubbly Aquamarine (Sara Paxton), a real mermaid, who offers them a single wish if they find someone who'll love her in three days. Because then ber undersea dad may release her from a pre-arranged marriage with a merman that she has no feelings for. it's derivative but, surprisingly, not patience-testing or annoying at all. Paxton is such a sunshine-y, friendly presence as the displaced mermaid, it's easy to suspend disbelief. The other characters fit snugly as well: Raymond (Jake McDorman), the blond lifeguard that she goes head-overfishtail for, is gentlemanly and sensitive. And even when we've seen Levesque and Roberts' characters a hundred times before, they both do decently as innocent, well-meaning and arguably uncool kids who grow up a hitle by the adventure's end.

The breezy dialogue conveniently writes off Aquamarine's world; we never get to see any other magical creature and vistas, and we don't need to. The relationship between Aquamarine and Raymond is creatively tackled, and makes one ponder if a person can honestly and believably love another in just three days. "Aquamarine" answers that wisely, and serves up a nice, somewhat bittersweet ending that one wouldn't have expected from a cute, wholesome summer flick about friendships, a mermaid and magic wishes.

movie begins on a celebration night with noise and crowd and then this horrible thing happens which is noise, crash, bang and boom! I said to Wolfgang, "You don't need to hear one line. It's all done. You can see them but you don't have to hear it." For 90 minutes, you can just hear people seeing people going but why do you have to hear the lines? I still say that if they had done it (make it a silent film), it would have been the best film of the year (laughter).

Congratulations on your recent marriage, Any chance that your honeymoon will be on a cruise shin?

My fiancée at that time and my wife now, Svetlana, and I went on the Queen Mary from New York to London and back. When I got on the Queen Mary, I walked in... just to see what it would look like. I would go back, you know. It was great and I would do it again in a minute. Two days rater, we started shooting.

How did you meet Svetlana?

We were teiling our story one day and then we looked at each other. We realized that we were reducing into words something so magica.... so we stopped. I don't tell the story anymore, I wil say this and I mean it. I'm 58. I never expected love. I never expected any of this to happen to me.

What was the hardest to film, among the various ways that people die in this movie?

Someone actually said to me, "So in what way would you prefer to go, among those shown in this movie—by electrocution, burning or drowning?" I said, "Sleep" (laughter) That's the way I want to go, which I have no intention of doing.

What makes German director Wolfgang Peterson different from other filmmakers?

He's the only director I know who should be wearing lederhosen (laughter as he stood up and did his version of a German dance). He's fun and you can't help but speak like this when you're with him. I always end up talking like this (laughter) He's a civilized filmmaker. He goes home for dinner and that's a big deal. It means we're going home for dinner. Wow. But he worked a really hard day's work so it was tough. I became an actor because it was easy (laughter). You just kind of memorize and say things. This movie was not easy at all to do. This was the first time ever that I really earned my salary and I want a raise (laughter)

None but I loved the fact that he would rate a soup. He would say, "Nine!" and the word would go out. "It was a nine!" (laughter)

You really didn't have soup?

Sometimes I had the soup. I wasn't a soup guy. I was usually so tired. I was in the Jacuzzi. They had a Jacuzzi next to the set and I was in there whining and complaining.

A man who finds out

By Margie Quimpo-Espino

ACO UNDERHILES NAME may not ring a bell to most Filipinos but to many retailers, Underhill holds the key to making their cash registers ring.

Underhill is the gurn of shopping. He studies how consumers shop and wrote "Why We Buy" -a bestseller which talks about The Science of Shopping. He and his group, under the firm Envirosell, "track" consumers as soon as they walk in a shop—follow them and see what they touch, try on, and eventually buy or not buy. They time how long a purchase takes, or how the buyer looks at an item. They put cameras in a shop (with the permission of the owner of course) and record consumers shopping. Yes, they have videotaped pickpockets and shoplifters along the way.

He and his team then go through the data and make recommendations to the shop owners or manufacturers—such as changing the labels or the location of particular items. The objective of hiring Underhill and his group is to find out how to make consumers buy more in a particular shop.

Combining traditional market research techniques, anthropological observation methodologies and videotaping, Envirosell has established its reputation as an innovator in commercial research and as an advocate for consumer friendly shopping environments and packaging," its website states.

Biggest clients

His clients include the biggest companies in the world -Starbucks, Adidas, Coke, Fisher Price, Johnson & Johnson, L'Oreal, Levi Strauss, Philip Morris, Samsonite, Bioomingdale's, McDonald's, Burger King, Wal-Mart-and he operates in several countries.

Underhill was in town recently upon the invitation of Paolo Mercado, managing director of Publicis Manila, and talked to the advertising agency's clients which include Nestle Philippines Inc., Metrobank, PSBank, Procter & Gamble.

Mercado gave the inquirer an exclusive interview with Underhill, who lives in New York City-five houses from Carrie Bradshaw's apartment in the defunct TV show "Sex and

Underhill candidly says to ask him why he finally an accepted an invitation to come to the Philippines after turning down numerous invitations

"I've had numerous invitations to come here but he [Mercado] was the first to give a compelling invitation," said Underhill.

He said Mercado painted a different picture of what Publicis is in the Philippines compared with that of other agencies in the country. "He is doing work on a number of things that interest me

Mercado has been espousing a concept called "shopper's marker" where he is working on a mindset that there is a science to attracting shoppers to your store.

In other words, there is science to shop-

Underhill specifically points to a work Publicis is doing with sari-sari stores- what he calls the 'Ma and Pa' stores or more generally known as Mom and Pop stores—small kiosks all over the world that sell a variety of goods, located in residential areas.

Ma and Pa stores

Underhill said if somebody pays him, the one subject he would like to study and explore in Asia is the Ma and Pa store. He said this is an emerging market issue especially for large global consumer product manufacturers.

In the Philippines there are over 500,000 sari sari stores all over the country. And a huge percentage of the sales of consumer goods manufacturers like P&G and Unslever are still sold via these stores.

During his talk to Publicis' clients, Underhall said "the visual language is evolving faster than the spoken language. The connection between the eyes and the brains has never been better. The design studies all over the world have people that are under the age of 30. You have to think who you're connecting to." He cited as an example hotel stationery. The address and phone numbers and fax numbers are written in tiny fonts. And yet, Underhill paked, who are the usual guests of hotels? Businessmen whose eyesight are not A MANUB?

No need to go to Switzerland for hospitality degree

Local group sets up school with foreign firm to train Filipinos

THE FILIPINOS' REPUTATION for dedicated service with a smile has endeared them to hotel and restaurant chains here and

Enter any five-star resort or hotel around the world and there's a big possibility that there will be at least one Filipino in key departments, such as the concierge, housekeeping, rooms and food and beverage.

One of the reasons is the lack of a relevant degree in the hospitality industry, since very few can afford to go to the prestigious schools in the United States or Switzerland preferred by top hotel and restaurant chains it is this gap that a group of local and foreign investors wants to fill with the establishment of the Endurum Colleges in Ortigas Cen-

Endurum founder and president Jack Tuason tells the INQUINga that the school, which will take in its first students in June this year, is intended to provide Filipmos with the right skills and theoretical background they will need to make it in management positions once they graduate.

"What we want is to produce business graduates who will work in hotels or restaurants," Tuason says. "We want to produce man-

Tuason says there is no better time to put up a school like Endurun because of the growing demand for talent in the burgeoning hospitality industry in Asia.

There are countless spas, resorts, restaurants and hotels coming up in the region as Europeans. Americans and the more affluent Asians realize what Asia has to offer.

It is because of the projected growth in the hospitality industry in Asia that Les Roches of Switzerland, one of the oldest hotel schools in Switzerland, has decided to partner with Endurun, the latest partner school of Les Roches outside its native Switzer-

Les Roches president David Graves said during a recent conference call at the Endurum offices that Les Roches was encouraged to come to the Philippines because he believed that Filipinos have what it takes to become leaders in the industry.

Those who will choose to stay will get a bachelor's degree in International Hospitality Management from Endurun Colleges, majoring in either Culinary Arts or Hotel Administration.

On top of being more in touch with one's consumers, Underhill - treminded his audience that "we live in a world owned by man, managed by men, yet we expect the women to participate in it."

And yet Underhill says by 2010 the doctoral degrees in medicine, law, pharmacy will be held largely by women. He said it is not farfetched to soon see gas stations crossing with nat, salons. Men, he said, will become "ex one household pets."

He pointed out most grocery settings adopt designs made in the 1930s with milk on the left side and the meat on the right back side. But times are changing-many shoppers want to get in and out of a grocery quick. And there are shoppers who are willing to sacrifice money for less

"We need to re-think store planning. The way someone shops for coffee is different all over the world."

UNDERHILL says to most client, 🗓 -"the obvious isn't always transparent."

THE SPA INDUSTRY IS SEEN AS the fastest growing segment in the travel industry today. Hotel chains like the Mandarin Oriental, Shangri-La Hotels and Resorts, Banyan Tree and Pour Seasons are building spas all over the world as guest surveys show that more travelers consider a spa necessary in their choice of desti-

Local spas have responded to the worldwide trend. The Department of Tourism saw it fit to orga-nize a Spa Association of the 2 Philippines in 2004 as part of its 2 Wellness and Medical Tourism ? thrust. SAPI started with only seven founding members. Today,

The spa boom spawned a spa school. It is the first such school in the country with international and government (Tesda) accredi-

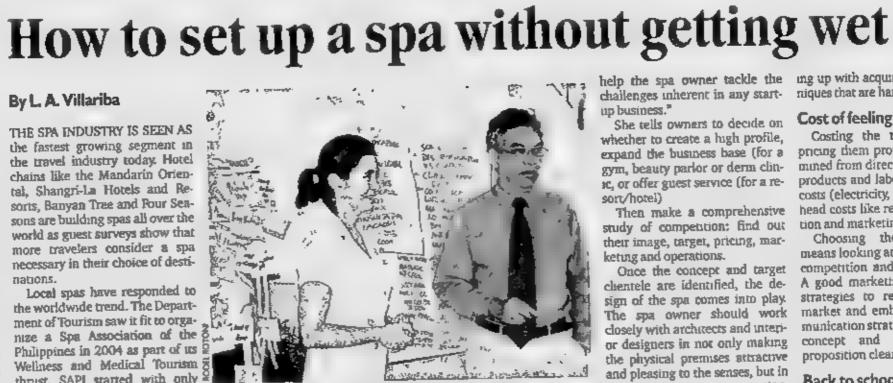

Spa Professional International Development Center president Cathy Brillantes, a graduate of Cornell University Executive Development Program in Spa Management, cites a Cornell study that links "a vacation spent in a destination spa (to) clearer thinking, higher energy levels and greater productivity at work."

A three-letter word

While the business looks promising, Cathy cautions, "It is not enough to offer massage and be called a spa.

The word spa is the acronym for the original Latin words salus per aqua, meaning health through water, which described the early Roman bathhouse.

She cautions that statistics have shown that many new spas fail in the first six months of operarion due to the operator's lack of knowledge in what makes a successful spa. "Many aspiring spa owners spend most of their time of the planned spa look and smell mce, while overlooking other just-as-important details such as choosing the right concept, space and revenue planning, a customer-driven menu, proper training, controlling costs and effective pricing."

She notes that inadequate training may lead to incorrect treatment procedures that can be disastrous to health and business.

As founder of SpaAsia Awardnominated Nurture Spa in Tagaytay Brillantes ensures that a spa menu of therapeutic massage, body scrubs, wraps and facial treatments be served in a safe, caiming, nurruring and ethical environment.

She recommends only the highest quality spa products-proven safe, therapeutic and beneficial to the skin-be used. A good spa product delivers on its promise of relaxation, stress release and better skin tone

It is not only proper but also imperative that spa practice include client consultation to ensure that no contraindications to and effort on making the interiors spa therapy exist, such as pregnancy, high blood pressure, cancer or recent operation.

Spa ethics

At the spa school, studenttherapists are taught the holistic approach to spa therapy. They are given a good grasp of anatomy and physiology to go with effective and safe massage techniques-from Thai, Shiatsu to Sports massage-with the end in view of "providing a rejuvenating, healing and wonderful spa experience for the guest."

Being driven blindly by profit in the spa industry may be the wrong morivation as this may lead to compromises in ethics, standards and quality. Because a spa typically takes two to three years to be able to stabilize and get us proper return on investment, owners should have the capacity and tenacity to be able to withstand the challenges of the first few years."

Her success formula: Passion for the business, strong interest in health and wellness and a strong artistic and creative streak can be the driving forces that will

whether to create a high profile, expand the business base (for a gym, beauty parlor or derm clinic, or offer guest service (for a resort/hotel)

Then make a comprehensive study of competition: find out their image, target, pricing, marketing and operations.

Once the concept and target chentele are identified, the design of the spa comes into play. The spa owner should work closely with architects and interior designers in not only making the physical premises attractive and pleasing to the senses, but in ensuring revenue generation, safety, easy maintenance, and time saving.

What's in the menu

Choosing a name and planning a spa menu that is unique, attractive and in sync with a defined concept comes next. "It must make clear choices on what product services to offer."

Ensuring the right staff involves proper recruitment and selection, based not necessarily on skills, but more importantly, on attitude. Therapists have a great responsibility as they interact with guests on a very personal and intimate basis.

She points out that hiring physical therapists is not essential to a successful spa. She would rather go for choosing staff who are numble of heart, pure of intention, willing to learn, attentive to detail and are focused on serving others, noting that this, plus facility with English, is why Filipinos excel over other Asians in Selecting therapists on the basis of attitude over work experience, then training them to the proper standards may prove to be practical in the investment end. It prevenus the spa manager from end-

Cost of feeling good

Costing the treatments and pricing them properly are determined from direct costs (laundry, products and labor) and indirect costs (electricity, water and overhead costs like rent, communication and marketing)

Choosing the right price means looking at the market, the competition and cost structure. A good marketing plan creates strategies to reach the target market and embarks on a communication strategy that tells the concept and unique selling proposition clearly

Back to school

The spa school, located along East Service Road on South Superhighway in Sucat, Parañaque, helps the industry players meet the standards for a safe, ethical, professionally run and financially viable venture.

Topics include a four-hour course on "Understanding the Spa-& Wellness industry* designed for hoteliers, architects, interior designers and medical health practinoners to acquire a deeper appreciation of the history of spa, the connection to wellness, and business opportunities in the weilness market.

A starter topic on "How To Set Up a Spa" is scheduled on May 20 and every third Saturday of the "Professional Spa Management" covers day-to-day operations of a spa and is slated on May

Outsourcing ventures provide light to blind

chief operating officer of Top Outsourcing Performance Inc. (TOP), is considering hiring more blind employees now that Alona Bat-eg. 33, a worker, and Ramon Estolas, 44, a teacher, have proven their worth.

Fabro, an events programmer by trade, infused P5 million to build the Center for Technical Excellence Integrated School Inc. (CTEIS), which trained TOP's two pioneer blind employees. It spawned TOP only months later.

Asia's first

The "blind employee" trend in outsourcing started as early as 2005 when Dr. Michael Borgonia became Asia's first visually disabled medica, transcriber. Borgonia lost his sight after he was shot in the head and signed up with Total Transcription Solutions Inc. (TTSI), one of the country's ordest outsourcing firms.

But Fabro says the industry's real gamble is in hiring skilled labor from the disabled work pool who have no training in medicine.

Officials of another medical transcription firm in Baguio say the fledgling trade is conservative about addressing quick expansions because it relies on the reputation of the few players in the trade

Medical transcription demands absolute accuracy and wrong data mustakenly transmitted to overseas medicai chents will immediately taint the country's reputation, Fabro

Extensive supervision

Blind workers require extensive supervision by data editors, she says, athough speedy improvement of the technology may find a solution to this efficiency question

Mabalot says the country has yet to make a census of the blind population, but estimates place them at 3.8 million.

She says a substantial number of the blind are schooled, despite recent United Nations studies suggesting that blandness in Asia is linked to the region's growing poverty.

Mabalot and her brother, Antonio Llanes Jr., are behind the advocacy group Adaptive Technology for Rehabilitation, Integration and Empowerment of the Visually Impaired

Mahalot says her brother's advocacy is for industries to make use of technology so the visually impaired can have a wider access to

No work for the blind

Bat-eg's story, for example, is one of frustration.

"I am licensed to handle case studies, but no one would hire me. I have tried to apply at the [Department of Social Welfare and Development] but [they have been too patronizing] I applied here in Baguio but they could not reconcile my bundness and a work load that requires field work," she narrates.

When she applied at the DSWD Region 1 of fice, she was curtly told to "just take care of my chadren."

Estolas' work history is less dramatic ala band of bund musicians at a city park.

According to Fabro, the outsourcing trade has a ready work pool in the medical industry's underemployed. Baguio alone has 25,137 graduates from the city's nursing universities, medical schools and medical technology colleges.

Fabro says this work force alone should sustain the small outsourcing businesses."

"There have been a lot of business concepts presented to me before, but it was medical transcription which got [me interested]," she

Medical transcription

Mabalot and Llanes approached Fabro about the outsourcing trade, keyed as they were about immediately training blind workers, together with the sighted, in the call center and medical transcription business.

"But we lacked the curriculum [in 2002, when CTEIS was born}... that's why we are working hand-in-hand now after [CTEIS] produced (Bat eg and Estolas)," Pabro says.

She recalls "sharing" the concept with outsourcing firms like TTSI, and says that these industry stalwarts had no clue as to how it could build a manageable work force made up of blind talents.

Technology is key

A key issue is the very technology that allows them better work opportunities.

Mabaiot admits that key computer interface software must be developed to cue blind workers about complicated data transcription operations. Current technology allows many bland workers access to the computer, but not total control over its operations.

The other complication is cost.

Fabro had one of her engineers design a transcription foot pedai which TOP is patenting as "Ang Pedal" because imported foot pedals are too expensive. Foot pads control the speed of audio or video data stream, freeing up the transcribers' hands so workers can manipulate the computer keyboards. "Ang Pedal," which is named after its designer, a TOP engineer, also includes unique control features that cut transcription time, according to Venice Maria Velasco, TOP vice president and operating manager.

Changing the face of medical marketing Doctor's approach is driven by savvy and keen instinct the time when the only medical procedures advertised were those for the treatment of STDs. The Philippines' famous cosmetic dermatologist helped change that with her nontraditional approach to marketing, particularly the high-profile celebrity endorsements and use of print ads and billboards.

Pioneering as her efforts may have been, Vicki's marketing approach is driven by savvy and keen instinct. I like my own life to be exciting," she says. I like things to be fun, that's why my clinics are fun."

For one, patients of the Belo Medical Clinic don't have to content themseives with leafing through old tattered issues of magazines because the magazines in her clinic, she makes sure, are always new. Plus, during summer, a visit to her clinic might earn for one a free treat of "duty" see cream.

The way Beio sells is how she would like to be soid to. "A lot of what we offer, I test on myself, " she avers, "When I talk to a patient about a procedure, most often 1 do so from personal experience," she adds unflinchingly.

And yes, if her approach has been atypical, Dr. Belo is well, untraditional. "I am very gregarious, I don't talk like a doctor," she offers. Neither does she look like one. For the 10 a.m. interview, Vicks showed up in a figure hugging dress pulled tight at the waist that established without a doubt that she was her own best endorser.

Quark returns the compliment, "My mom is a very creanve and daring person. She keeps on breaking the mold. Before, no one wanted to be a dermatologist but now everyone's into it '

Four chefs serve a smorgasbord

N A HOT AFTERNOON, Lifestyle had a most deli-cious chat with four of the most formidable women in the Philippine culmary scene-Glenda Barretto, Margarita Fores, Myrna Segismundo and Jessie Sincioco.

The subject was Kulmarya, an ambitious project bent on standardizing Filipino dishes in terms of preparation, presentation and taste. This is in line with the Department of Tourism's big dream of putting Filipino cuisine on the world map, much like what the Chinese, the Japanese, the That and, of late, the Vietnamese have done.

Not surprisingly, the chefs arrived with snacks for the occasion. Barretto brought Gi-

Bilo-Bilo. nataang Fores came bearing Carabao's Milk Panna Cotta with Sago, Bangus Mousse with slices of bread from Café Bola, and Leche Flan.

Sincioco offered a box of Princess Carmen and her famous Ciabatta breads. And Segismundo showed up with Turon, Baked Brie and Fruit in Fillo Purses and to-die-for Quezo de Bola Cheesecake. All this, despite having to face a "griling" by the Lifestyle staff.

Barretto is vice president and chief operating executive of Via Mare Corp. Fores runs Cibo, Pepato and Café Bola. Segismundo is managing director of Restaurant 9501 at the ABS-CBN complex. Sinctoco is toque behind the Le Souffle Restaurant and Wine Bar chain with branches in Fort Bonifacio, Rockwell and Cabbank's Top of the Cit. Clearly, if any group can whip up a lowly Filipino dish into an international bestseller, this is it. Not to mention the two male chefs involved in the project—Claude Tayag and Conrad Calalang.

A collaborative effort among the Asia Sociery, the Hotel and Restaurants Association of the Philippines, Anvil Publications, and the Department of Tourism, Kulinarya finally took off the planning board after five years when giant food company San Miguel Purefoods Inc. came into the picture with funding. The Kulinarya group has chosen 40 Filipino dishes to standardize.

What we have to correct, they all agree, is the Filipino attitude of looking down at their own food

Everyone has been wondering about this-why has Filipino cuisine not reached the same level of popularity as other Asian cuisine, even the Vietnamese?

Margarita Fores (MF): Myrna (Segismundo) said the other day that the reason Filipino cuisine hasn't made its mark is that we ourselves, in the Philippines, don't really look at our cuisine in a good way, parang it's something more pambanay. And, usually, when there are foreign guests, Filipinos are always asking themselves: "Are they going to be impressed or not? Should we do something else?"

You're saying we're not confident about our own food?

MP. Yes, we're not confident. We're also not clear about what it really is. Is that what Kulinarya will do?

MF Try to standardize it. So, even in restaurants in the provinces, if they use, say, the standardized recipe that Kulmarya formulates for a classic recipe like adobo, the DOT (Department of Tourism) will identify them as certified Kulmarya practitioner that can do a classic Filipino adobo.

Are you telling us that we have to change the way we cook adobo or tinola at home?

Glenda Barretto (GB): No. Ano lang, like sinigang, it won't be as maasim as we normally like it. Gusto kasi sa arin mas maasim, mas

Are you also saying that we should use a particular toyo or suka in cooking?

GB. That's a thought. (Laughter)

MF: The challenge here is finding [what is] most readily available if you are cooking Filipino food whether in New York, Italy...

GB: Yes, in the US we use apple cider vine-

MP: Like the Pinoys in Italy, when they make kare-kare, they use artichokes instead of puso ng saging. GB: Similar ang texture. The adobo in Luzon, it's saucy and in the Visayas, it's dry. What will be standard? MF: That's what we have to decide on. (Laughs) As I was saying, it is going to be a real challenge. We will cook different types and

'Now we're using a lot of sigarilyas. Just the other day in Pepato, we used patani as siding and it's really like the lima beans'

we will decide among ourselves and with critics which we will adopt. That doesn't mean it's the adobo everyone should follow because each family has its own, each cook

You should also be creative.

MF: Yes, but, at least, there should be one type of adobo that will be known all over What other dishes are on the list?

GB. Adobo, sinigang, lumpia, pancit, morcon, kare-kare, pinakbet, kilawin, SIS 8 ..

Dinuguan?

GB: No, it has blood eh. Although the French are very adventurous. French and Germans, they like the flavor because medyo sour and very savory. Kasi they also like our tokwa't baboy.

Maybe you should invite foreigners? Jessie Sincioco (JS): Yes, that's a good

GB: Actually we could ask naman (Norbert) Gandler, sina chef Cyrille (Soenen)

MF: ...and they know what their own people will appreciate.

GB. Yung mga kumakain ng bagoong but still know what their country mates have an aversion to. Smell is important and that's the problem with bagoong.

Could you standardize the patis and the bagoong?

GB: You can buy pans pure, its more expensive than the commercial patis. It's like That or Vietnamese patts

JS. Actually our special patis is better than the Thai patis kaya lang they don't sell it commercially, that's the problem, and so what people know about the patis is the pungent one. You really have to check on the commercial aspect, like the patis that they sell, if we want to standardize that,

MF: I think what they have for export is already tempered

JS. To a level.

GB: I buy puro.

MF Even our bagoong, iba-iba.

What is questionable about the bagoong is its preparation. GB: Ay, correct! (Laughter) Walang hygierically prepared bagoong. (Laughter) I'm telling you because I process bagoong. Anong nakituta ko sa bagoong? Yung mga ano... (points to one of her fingers) plaster. MF: Band-A.d?

GB: Band-Aid. That's why we wash our bagoong. It's too salty anyway. We wash it in boiling water to lessen the saltiness and then we simmer for at least one hour. And I fust make gisa in garlic, olive oil.

MF: Even the guinamos from Bacolod, when it's raw from the garapon .

GB: Mabango no? (Laughter)

MF: Even just the smell of adobo ... It's really the smell of the Filipino household.

Are there desserts and pastries on the

JS: Margarita is taking care of the leche flan and the canonigo.

MF: Kasi nga we want Spanish influence and that also makes the dessert list in the Philippines so wide. Yes, we have the gata from our Maiay influence

If you go to Spain, can you order canonigo?

MF. That I don't know. I guess, Tita, they have that, no?

GB: Yeah, they have.

JS. But they do it in milk. MF: And custard.

JS: We have gunumis, cassava cake, leche flan, canonigo, halo-halo, bananalangka-mangga turon, maja blanca, bukopandan gelatin... Sapın-sapin I'll do, gumataang halo-halo, sago't guiaman. So considered dessert ang sago't gula-

MF: Even sinangag, it's there on the list.

But isn't the traditional sinangag made only of rice and garlic?

MF: Yes.

JS: Pero yung iba milalagyan ng kung

MF: Ying sa Negros, yung balat ng bawang sinasama in Bacolod. Kası siguro they're too lazy. JS: In Bulacan also, if you do sinangag, you just leave the garlic peel in. GB: Sa amin naman, we add the salt in the rice and mash the salt with the rice before frying. Para timpla na t'saka walang lumps. So malasa. MP: And I guess, generally, [for] the sinangag, we really have to use the old rice. What about lechon?

GB: Actually we can include lechon cooked in a convection oven because I do lechon de leche.

Where are you doing your food tastings?

GB: San Miguel.

MF: Our recipe 'di ba, Tita? Even if you follow the recipe, what's more important is the timing ch.

GB: Yun ang importante, the timing, the temperature, especially in stewing, braising. Ang huig-hilig ng mga Pinoy sa.. MF: ...high ang apoy!

What is your favorite Filipino food? Maın dish.

GB: Adobo, sinigang.

JS: Halabos na talangka, sinampalukang

MP: Tabe ng talangka, paksiw na fish, Ilonggo-style.

Myrna Segismundo (MS): Adobo, paksiw and guinataang hipon.

JS: Have you tried the sinampalulang manok, native chicken, and ang spapangasim mo yung usbong? Ang bango. Yun lang, yung green. Piling-pili yun, yun ang pmang-aasim.

MF: That's Bulacan-style?

Pero may sawsawan 'di ba yong sinampalukang manok?

JS: Normally timplade na you but, if you want, you can dip it in calamans and paris. MS: Every dish has its own sawsawan.

GB: Yeah, baligtad sila.

JS: Kulinarya should have a chapter just on sawsawan. (Laughter)

MS: While we were talking about it, we were saying padagdag na nang padagdag ang chapters kasi nagtatanong yung ibang reporters. Even the origins of the cuisine so that people will have an understanding...

JS: I think the origin is one of the more important features.

Okay, what's your favorite Filipino dessert?

MF: Minatamis na saba. Hands down.

GB: Turon ni Myrna! (laughter) JS: Ay ako sapin-sapin. The best.

MS: Ako, bibingka ni Tita Glenda (laughter). Yung bibingka na talagang galapong. JS: Turon saging. I like banana also with crushed ice and evap... MS: Halo halo... And, I don't know...

We're the only country that eats bananas with our meals. I eat adobo with banana. Or mango with adobo and rice. Yung pang-alis ng suya? In Max di ba before...?

JS: ...Fried banana. MS: ...Spring chicken, buttered rolls and bananas for dessert. MF: Ako naman, my dad, every meal the dessert has to be beside his dinner and he has to take a bite of it. MS: My dad, too! And he ends it with coco jam sometimes. MF: And, if we don't have any dessert in the house, he'll just open the nata de coco and put it in a bowl. MS: Ganon, kamı din. What particular Filipino dish won't you eat? MF: Siguro papaitan.

GB: Ang di ko ma-take yung ano, sa... JS: Crickets?

So yang Kulinarya, aayusin lahat yan pati sawsawan? So pati sawsawan standardized na?

MS: I think we will have a section on sawsawan because it's very unique, in a way, to Asia, particularly the Philippines. For example, in Israel, there is no concept of sawsawan. There is no word for it. So when we did the Filipino food festival there, they were asking what all those little sauces were because they had no sawsawan there. So, kumbaga, it's so ahen to them. So if we're going to go international.

We can make the sawsawan the fo-

MF. That's what Annie Besa wrote in the book... there was adobo on one page and then the next page was the sawsawan.

MS: For example, we refuse to have a concept of dressing di ba. Sa atin wala tayong dressing. Micky (Fenix) and I were saying, dressing lang natin, suka, paminta, asukal. Di ba thar's our vinaigrette already? In a way, siguro because we were not introduced to the concept of dressing, ang sawsawan natin is something we can equate

JS: No meal is complete without the sawsawan. That's why there's always patis. Talagang I think every household in the Phillppines would have a container for patis.

GB: It's not even present in the Visayas. They call it toyo. MF: Toyol And they use the word toyo for

GB: Kasi yung pinatisan is cooked with MP: What they call toyo there is patis. In Bacolod it's baligtad. MS: Rufina ata yung tawag... (laughter) If you want patis, you ask for Rufina. If you ask for patis, you'll get toyo.

MP: That's in Bacolod.

JS: Ang sarap nun! (laughter) MS: O di ba pag kinagat ka, kagatin mo rini (laughter)

Anything na may insekto kinakain mo rin? Palaka kumakain ka?

MS: Oo, kinakain nila yun... Ah at yung... okay, nasa driftwood. They've got these worms you kind of wash it in saltwater lang daw and you eat it alive. Umm! That's in the "Culmary Culture of the Philippines," yung kay Gilda Cordero?

But you don't eat that? MS: No, I don't think so. (laughs)

JS: Ang sarap ng palakat

So hindi totoong acquired taste ang Filipmo food?

MS: Hindi, I don't know... they try it out right away. Every guest we serve in the restaurant, every foreigner I serve, because in corporate dining we have a lot of foreign clients and expats, we always make it a point to serve Pilipino food. It has never been a problem. In fact, each time, they say how pleasantly surprised they are about Filipino food because, in a way, we cook it cor-going to quote me...

Maraming mga Pinoy na pag foreigner ang bisita parang ayaw siyang dalhin sa Filipino restaurant. They're so worried na baka hindi magustuhan .

GB. Yun nga yung sinasabi natin. Parang munamakit natin ang sarili nating lutum. MS: We're the first to put ourselves

MF: And parang it's a result of our colonial mentality.

How do you think will the Kulinarya project help?

MS: Well, if it's used, it will definitely set the benchmark for how Filipmo food should be projected and how Filipino food, at least 40 dishes, will be identified, di ba? Like with Japanese and That and other cuisine, there are certain dishes that we immediate ly identify like sushi, sashimi, tempura...

JS: Sukiyakı...

MS: With That it's Tom Yam, Phad That. sticky rice and mangoes, Pandan Chicken, that sort of thing. So, with the Philippines ...hopefully they will know the standard adobo they can expect each time. So that's the thrust of the project. Nothing new, really, Just correcting.

What is the role of the Asia Society? MF: It was actually Doris Ho who really felt that an effort like this was very neces

GB. It has been like five years since Dons thought about this. But at least ngayon meron nang financing.

And the role of San Miguel is financ-

GB: Yes.

How do you handle complaints about the greasiness of Filipino food?

MS: Well like, for example, our habit of cooking adobo with lots of fat and the choice of cut we use, liempo, nandiyan la hat ng taba pag natunaw yan. Did you know kokonti lang sa atin know what cuts to use? The only difference they know is buto. laman. They don't know which cuts to use for certain dishes. Stewing cuts, choice cuts, prime cuts, walang masyadong may alam niyan. Hopefully we will address this also. And then, for example, vegetables. We like to overcook our vegetables. That's something you correct in a dish like pinakbet, for example. We'll correct the saltiness siguro, as well as the doneness of the vegetables be ing al dente instead of labsak.

So all the regions are represented in Kası baka may magtampo. MS: Cebu magtatampo sigurado. Líke their sinigang, yong tinatawag rulang tinola, it's actually their sinigang. It's really bland by the Tagalog standards because they just use tomatoes for souring. Ayaw nila ng maasim.

GB: Tomatoes lang at saka spring onions How about the south? How about Min-JS: Ano bang mga food nila? Yung mga

Hands down, what's the most popu-

GB and JS Adobo. MS: Adobo pa rin-You don't think lumpus? GB. The survey said lumpia.

JS Talaga? GB: Kaya lang available ito sa mga supermarkets... lahat ng klaseng lumpia. Shang hai, gulay, ubod. Di ba when you tell them you come to my party, ay I'm busy? I'm serving lumpia, ay go! Lumpia and pancit. (Laughter) MF. When we were in New York with my mom, that was the way that we would get into Studio 54. We would bring pancit and lumpia for the doormen. (Laughter) Nakabaiot sa foil... And then if you say you're going to serve lumpia and pancit, your American guests will bring pa their relatives. (laughter) MF: It's also not as unpleasant to cook lumpia abroad as compared with say adobo. So the Pilipinos will cook lumpio and pancit more than adobo...

MS. My sisters have learned to work with adobo in the States. Instead of stewing, they try the oven. That's something you might want to consider. Kasi it can really be a braised dish. It's actually wrong to say stewed adobo because it's really a braiseo;

So how do you improve the look of MS: You don't need to. The other night I was at Spices for a Thai food festival preview, their food was all brown! (laughter)

So it's not a valid complaint that our food is all brown?

MS: No, no .. What we should complain about is the fact that we put too much soy sauce, which we shouldn't because soy sauce actually hardens meat, di ba, Tita

GB: Yes... At saka hindt mo na nalalasahan yung niluluto mo dahi, overwhelmed siya ng soy sauce.

What about atsuete?

MS: I'm from Batangas, we have atsuete in adobo, in fact, sometimes without soy

No, the fresh ones?

MS: Fresn? Atsuete? Yung seeds? (laughter) Oh, I've not tried that. Di ba dina-dry muna yung atsuete?

We usually use, when it's available, the newly harvested ones. Masarap ang flavor, more aromane flavor.

JS. Okay yun ano?

MS. Ah, wow... really ...

GB: Ay magpakuha tayo ng atsuete. JS: Oo, may fresh pala

What's your favorite fish and how do you prepare it?

GB. Fish? I love sea bass. Apahap.

How do you cook it? GB: Steamed or yung fried na yung malutong na malutong, with just garlic and soy MS: Actually, di ba... when you're asked what your favorite food is, ang hirap isipin?

GB: Oo, kasi ang dami ... MS: I guess it's different on our part kasi maraming nagagawa. So there's not one...

No, food to eat, to eat ...

MS: Ako actua...y, kung tatanungin nyo, wala, kasi ang dami. GB. Ako galunggong! Sarap ng galung-

JS: Ako tilapia.

MS. Kikiro is kitang. MF: I didn't know kitang was kikiro.

MS: You know what? Depende sa freshness ng fish. Something as simple as tilapia, basta sariwa, ang sarap-sarap kamin... JS: Ginataan na tilapia, very nice.

What do you do with sapsap?

JS: Fried lang. GB. Tinola lang. You just boil plenty of tomatoes and scalions MS. Pag seafood, the less you do the bet-

GB: And then paglagay mo ng sapsap. . aww! Perfect.

And then hot rice... Freshly cooked

GB. With sawsawan. Pag umuwi ako ng summer, ayan na, naka-lineup na yan

MS- Kikiro, kitang

Iba pala yung sapsap sa kitang. Pinapaksiw dm?

Kitang is piniprito?

MF. Kitang, di ba they make it kulo with dahon and they put later the orden. But in Capiz, the kikiro they just make it ihaw. Capiz mostly they just make thaw.

MS: Dapat yung nagsasalubong yung alat and tabang. Like ang Taa., yong brackish water Masarap ang fish diyan sa brackish water. Like manputo... I think salmon is like that, they go from sair to fresh di ba?

MF: That's why in Capiz, seafood is talagang masarap. Kasi the water is brackish.

Do we have a lot of seafood on the menu that you're going to standardize? Shouldn't seafood be one of our major selling points? Don't the foreigners always look for seafood when they come here?

MS. Yeah. Oo.

MF: Actually, showing the uniqueness of the Philippines . for example, like Mindanao has the coconut crab ...

MS. Siguro part 2 na yan JS. The more popular Filipino dishes are

But I think the foreigners, when they come and eat here, they order seafood. They will eat the lumps and the adobo when they're in a Filipino home but in a restaurant they'il order seafood. MS: But you know it's a good point nga

JS: Maybe that will be another book, just on seafood.

What are the Filipino appetizers? GB: Yun ang wala.

GB: Ang hirap mag-isip ng appetizer na

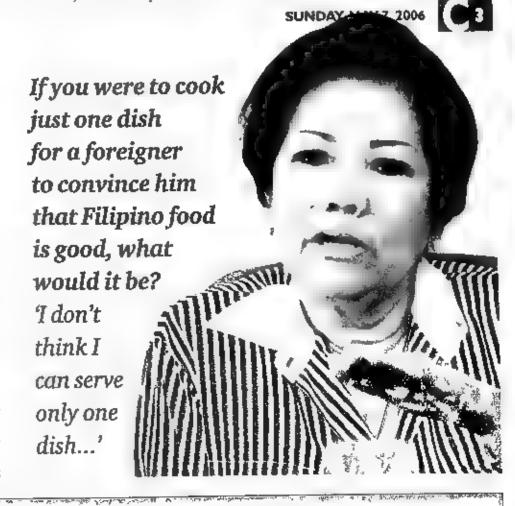

MS: When we were doing the cookbook, we had a difficult time deciding how we would divide the chapters. Because Filipino food is not really broken down into apperizer, soup, main course, dessert. It should really be more pork, beef, seafood, chucken, vegetables.

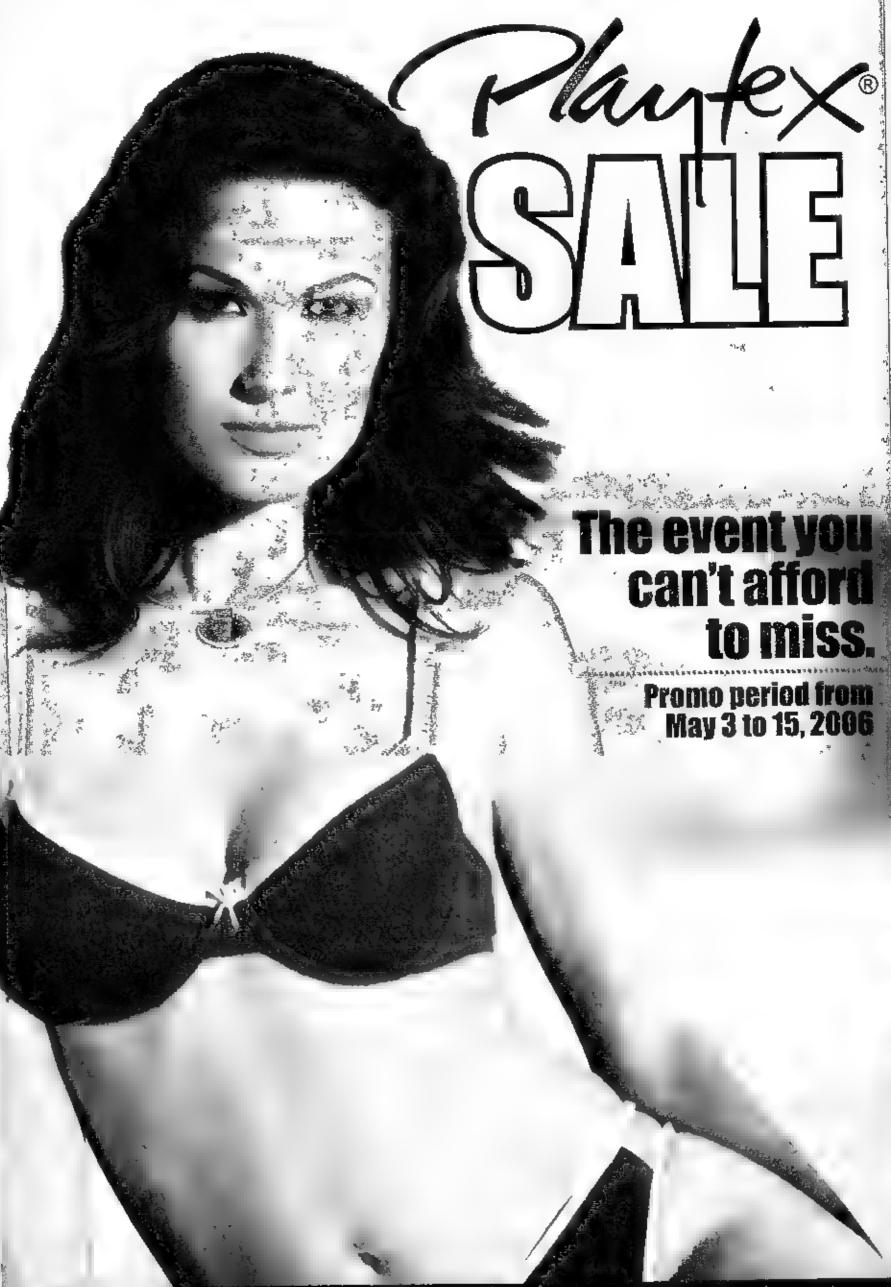

But if we're going to hit the international market, shouldn't we do that? Didn't the Thais do that?

JS: Manggang hilaw and itlog na maalat. Yun ang salad natin

Are you going to come up with a menu for restaurants?

MS: Actually this menu is more commercial than it is domestic. But it can be really more for commercial use, I think we should start with the restaurants.

I imagine that's what the Department of Tourism will do.

MS: Yes. In fact they said they were going to open a café in Tokyo.

They have one slated for Moscow. JS: And one of the objectives of the book is to make the Philippines a culmary destina-

MS: They've realized that, you know, a big chunk of tourism is really culinary. MS: Right, Particularly in the provinces di ba? But you know what? Wala namang problema eh. How many foreigners go to Boracay, to Bohol, to all these places and they love the food? So how is it cooked? Nobody complains about that,

JS: I guess it's also because they have no

the dust from the filter mesh.

MS: And also because they don't know how to eat. (laughter)

But what about hygiene?

MS: I'll tell you one thing: We don't heat our food. To a professional chef, that is germs multiplying by the second. So to a foreigner who understands food, he sees something cold in the carinderia, ang tingin na niya agad sa pagkain na yon, madumi na yan. SARS na, bird flu na ang tingin nila sa mga iyon. Sa atin, okay lang. But sanitation and hygiene standards dictate that food has to be not so germs do not survive. So di natin yun natintindihan, ialo na sa probinsya.

But we must be doing something right! MP: Tingnan mo nga, we're the only but flu-free country, no SARS, no bird flui

MS: No, because we are the germs! (laugh-

MF: in a nutshell, we are the germs! in the bagoong for example, can mi-get invited to do a Filipino food festival in the Philippines. (Laughter) In Cebu. Because the kind of Filipino food they have there is very different from what you have here. Sinigang na lang, for example, malayo. Yung lechon may sawsawan dito, dun wala. Di be yung mga gamung klase. So we sent our menus for the whole week. The executive chef e-mailed me yesterday and said they had concerns about hygiene and sanitation, about serving

Why not? Off the record.

MS: Naku, imposible! (laughter)-sa la-OUTRER DR. . . (laughter)

Are you excited about this project?

MS: Yes, very much. 3 MF: Actually, challenging for us.

MS: We waited too long, and like, well, you know, I don't know any other cusine. Only Fliipino. That's what I grew up with, it's very nice to work with it because it's your own.

JS: Actually, this should've been done a long time... most probably, if this was done a long time ago, Philippine cuisine would already have a place in the world map of cook-

MS: The head of Asia Society was saying yesterday the Filipmo chefs were gaining recognition but not Filipino food.

How true. And they're working with oth-

MS: Yeah...

JS: But it's not only this group, the chefs, that should be involved but also the Department of Health. The government should help

The schools! They have to teach them ... They don't di ba, in the culinary schools? MS: No, in fact, the only culmary school that offers Filipino cuisine as a subject is...

U₽ lang? MS: No. It's CCA (Center for Culinary Arts). When I was speaking to the graduates one time, I said I would like to request that you include Pilipino cuisine in your curriculum and they said they were the only school that offered .. Maybe because they think it's something they already know? Pambahay nga ang sabi... Ayun ang problema...

MF: Pero I think what will also make this successful is [for us] to have a unified mindset. We have to agree that maybe we need to compromise in certain areas just to be able to come up with something marketable. We have to sort of decide on being regional also. We have to be clear about the goal.

And I think the project should go with the whole campaign of being proud to be a Filipino. Because if you're not... you'll always be saying, ah I cannot take this to a Filipino resto because it's all brown. Or it doesn't

If you were to cook just one dish for a foreigner to convince him that Filipino food is good, what would it be?

JS: Just one dish? It has to be adobo. Because more or less they're familiar with the taste already. So it's just a matter of presenting it in a nice way that they will really appreciate it and cook it in a way that's not too offending.

MF: Ako lumpiang gulay. Pried, I think people always love fried food. And that's the one thing you'll taste from Filipmo...

GB. I don't think I can serve only one dish.

MF: Not a good question kay Tita Glendal GB. It has to be adobe but adobe that is like garnished with himpia, with a serving of fried fish...

Smorgasbordi

GB: I agree. At saka sabay-sabay lahat MS: We're not one-dish meal people

JS: Really, food has to be shared. Nasa pairings nga yan eh. Di ba adobo

MS: Bagana, (laughter) JS: Kare-kare!

MS: Adobo with singang. Adobo and monggo. Paksiw and monggo, rather.

GB: Tumutulo na naman laway ko. Okay, this is a really important question. In a standard halo-halo, how many ingredients should be there? (Laughter)

GB: Anywhere from 10-12. Sandosenang halo. (Laughter)

When we do festivals abroad, we try to do it from scratch. Kung merong beans, usually the three kinds of beans are available anywhere in the world. But the rest of the ingredients like kaong, saging, nata-yan, mga bortled na yan. But if you use them straight from bottle, they don't taste anything. You still have to cook them. What we do is we cook them again in syrup, and then add flavoring, [like] dayap MP: ... Or pandan.

Halo-halo is good only with evap milk.

Philippine countryside, doing so in Spain was something to reash. Setting off early for the Nuevos Ministerios train station and the twohour ride to our chosen destination, we found Spanish trains not only efficient, modern, spacious and comfortable, but also relatively very affordable

The 60-kilometer Madrid-Segovia route, for example costs 5.45 euros (about P350) one-way, a price an ordinary Filipino traveler can still afford. Oddly enough, it's cheaper than paying the 6 90 euros price for a regular movie ticket in the Spanish capital.

Medieval city

The way to Segovia was through a countryside filled with rocky but verdant hills and mountains and dotted with countless olive trees, the Mediterranean evergreen that makes possible the production of olive out-a staple of Spain's gastronomic culture.

Approaching our destination, we were greeted by the view of a medieval city in the distance. From the "contemporary" part of town, we decided it was worth the effort to walk at, the way to the old city, for a gampse of a place located in the Spanish region of Castilla y León situated directly on the northwestern border of Madrid.

On reaching the limits of medieval Segovia, what appeared as a faraway series of arches in between buildings loomed larger and larger as we approached. The walk toward the structure led us to the ancient, impressively colossal Roman aqueduct that easily dwarfed the city.

History has it that the Romans built it in the 1st century with nothing to hold the gigantic gran.te blocks together save for an ingenious architectural technique of hewing stones in a manner that took advantage of gravity. Although its function of supplying the city with fresh water from nearby mountains may no longer exist, it lives on as the monument that distinguishes Segovia the most from Spain's other noteworthy travel sites.

After the usual ritua, of the "Pinoy Kodak moment" around the aqueduct, the gang and I decided to head toward the local townsm office to help us get started. A quick look at our maps made us realize that we would need a few days at least to visit all the recommended sites, so we decided to focus on a few points of GOTHIC cathedral

Shades of Intramuros

First on the agenda was an easy hike up toward the ancient city wans that seemed fused to the aqueduct. From here, we took in a breathtaking view of the surrounding village and mountains, not to mention the glorious Spanish sunshine. A pleasant stroll through the streets of the old town reminded me a bit of walking around Manila's Intramuros district, but the chill in the air and the tack of guardia civil patrolmen dressed in Katipunanstyle garb brought me right back to Spain.

Walking past the obligatory Plaza Mayor (every town in Spain has one), the many tourist shops, and the ever-present cafes playing host to scores of visitors, we headed toward the Gothic cathedral. Although relatively sparse in terms of artwork compared to other Spanish cathedrals, its marvelously detailed altar, majestic dome, the huge church interior with high vaulted ceilings, and the immense courtyard surrounded by gigantic elaborately carved gothic-style windows were impressive enough to make up for the ack of adornment

With all the walking about, our stomachs, now accustomed to the very late Spanish lunch period of between 2-4 p.m., gave us attie choice but to head to a nearby restaurant What to eat? Since we were in the region of the renowned cochinillo, we decided to go for

Accompanied by a serving of the local version of French fries and a few glasses of local red wine, we were sufficiently nourished to be able to continue exploring the town.

Impressive structure

Amused by museums, churches, convents and shops that we passed, we didn't realize how rate it was getting. Foregoing the Jewish museum depicting medieval life in Segovia before they were expelled from Spain in 1492 (the same year Cristobal Coion, better known as Christopher Columbus, discovered America), we proceeded to the A.cazar of Segovia, an impressive structure that guidebooks say was an inspiration to Walt Disney for his fairytale castle in "Sleeping Beauty."

The long walk from the center of town led as through centuries-old streets winding height without the aid of modern technology. along ancient walls which protected the city from invasions of long ago. The view of the surrounding countryside was samply inspiring: trees in various shades everywhere, interrupted every now and then by a medieval building or two. The warning daylight bathed the scene with mexplicable glow, a view that

With only minutes left before closing, we learned that visits to the Alcazar were divided into two the castle itself with its rapestries, portraits, paintings, a collection of medieval armor, and the imposing tower. As we crossed the drawbridge over the moat, some of the group decided to enter the castle while the rest proceeded to the tower.

The climb up the tower was an interesting if physically challenging treat. At the top, we were treated to a view of the distant city center and the immense cathedral on one side, a view of the castle's walls and rooftops on another, and on the remaining sides, a view of the surrounding landscape of nearby towns and open country under the glow of the setting sun.

As we leaned out at the view below, we thought it amazing how people could build a structure so beautiful and solid at such great a

And speaking of heights, we quickly realized as we looked down that the most we passed as we crossed the drawbridge into the castle was actually an abyss where, according to our guidebook, in the 14th century, a nursemaid negligently dropped an heir to the throne into the depths below and, to avoid being punished, quickly flung herself next to the boy. With that knowledge in hand, we were more than extra-careful on the way down the tower Some things decline over time, but the almost endless drop into the depths of an abyss isn't one of them.

As we tushed back from the Alcázar to the center of the old city and to the train station, we couldn't help but feel disappointed for the lack of time to explore all that Segovia had to offer. But resting on the seats of the train as it took us back to Madrid, we were comforted by the thought that a second trip back was only a two-hour ride away.

USE coordinated embellishments.

ADD descriptions to your scrapbook page.

S a fun and creative way of keeping photographs in tiptop shape; it also makes reliving the memories attached to photos a wonderful experience.

"All a person needs to create a great scrapbook are imagination and memories," says Jette Tabermila, a scrapbooking instructor who has given workshops to kids as young as 5 years old. Jette says that mome who attend her workshops view scrapbooking as a stress rehever while the children consider it a big help for school projects.

"it's easier to do than most people think," she continues, "You can do it for your own pleasure or to give as a perfect gift. The time and effort you've put in it will show just how much you care for the person who receives it."

Ready to get all colorful and crafty with your very own scrapbook? All About Scrapbooking gives easy-to-follow steps to get you started.

Collect your materials. Photos are at the heart of most scrapbooks, so make sure you have enough to choose from. But don't forget other kinds of materials you can use. It's, of course, important to have your Keepsakes Scrapbook album and scrapbook pages ready as well as your basic scrapbooking tools and adhesives. Keepsakes paper packs, frames, stickers, shapes, Craftin' & Scrappin,' and All About Scrapbooking embellishments offer many possibilities for decorating your scrapbook

Organize your photos. You can sort photos into smaller categories by grouping them according to events such as birthdays, vacations and holidays, or by compiling the pictures by family members. Label photos in order to record important dates and details. Use a quick-drying marker like the Bic Grip Permanent Pelt-tip Marker to ensure that your labels last.

Crop your photos. It's best to select only three to four photos that capture the essence of a relationship or event. You may cut the photos you have chosen into different interesting shapes or designs to make them more attractive. Also make sure that you have the negatives or a CD compilation of the photos for future use. If you are indecisive on how to go about cropping your photos, here are some guide questions to keep in mind. What is the main subject of the photo? What items in the picture divert from this main thought and could be cut out? Is there more than one detail you would like to highlight?

Mat your photos. Highlight pictures by sticking them onto different colored or patterned sheets. You decide on how wide you'd like you're mat to be. Put frames or borders to heighten the effect. Choose your theme and decorate accordingly. There are a lot of themes you could adapt, such as "A Very Merry Christmas," "Baby's Firsts" and "Summer Fun."

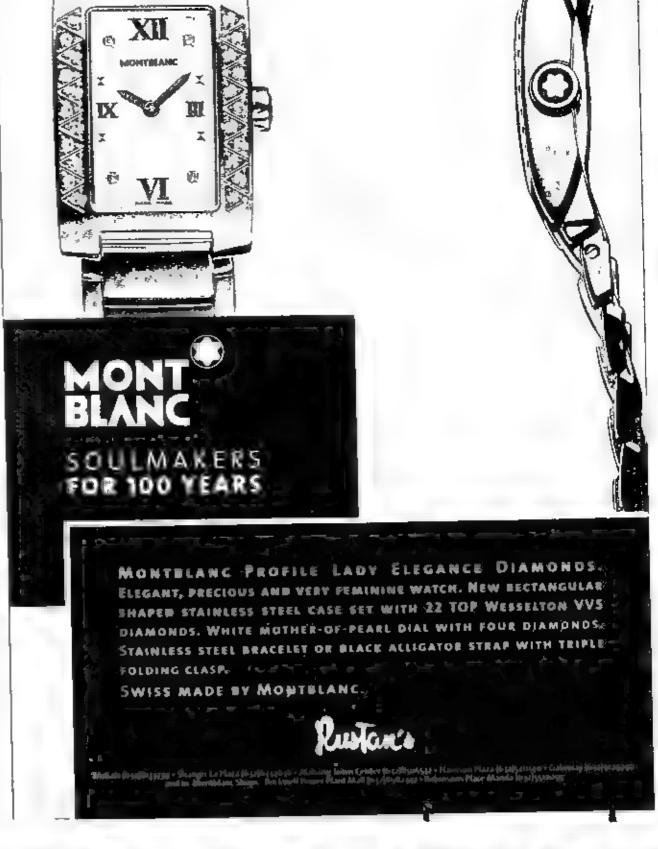

Select your colors by keeping your theme in mind. Use pastel tones for a baby-theme scrapbook; bright colors and floral patterns for a summer motif; and reds, greens and golds for the happy holidays.

Use coordinated embellishments to fit your design. Use appropriate adhesives. Bit has a range of acid-free, photo-safe adhesives you can use such as the Bit Gluestick that's great for pasting photos and paper materials; Bit Glue Pen for fibers, threads and ribbons; and Bit All-Purpose Glue for 3D materials that are difficult to mount.

Use titles. Be sure to add a descriptive title to your scrapbook page. You can go for simple otles such as "Sisters" and "New Year's Eve," and include relevant details. You may also use punchy titles like "The Great Ger-away" for a memorable vacation or "A Musical Extravaganza" for a concert, recital or school performance. Adding some personal thoughts, poems or quotes will also help establish the story behind those pictures.

Sassy Kitty in couture

DITA Sandico Ong with Animaland's "Diwata"

KATE Torralba with her "Sassy Kitty in KT"

FREDERICK Peralta with "Sassy Freida Walks Down the Aisie"

TO CELEBRATE MOTHER'S Day, four of the country's top designers—JC Buendia, Kate Torralba, Dita Sandico-Ong, and Frederick Peralta—styled and dressed up Animaland's adorable and cuddly Sassy Kitty (body stats: 19-18-25).

"We believe we have to offer something special to the great and loving mothers out there. This year's Mother's Day promo is our tribute to the selfless mothers whose love to their children and families is immeasurable," explained Belinda Dy, owner of Animaland, an international chain of retail stores and kiosks that allows stuffed toy-lovers all over the world to make and dress their own stuffed animals.

Dubbed "Designer Kitties for Moms," the Mother's Day promo that will run until May 14 is giving away four kitty stuffed toys, with sizes bigger than the usual. "They are specially made for the occasion, one-of-a-kind, and so they are really collector's items. Plus the fact that famous designers are doing the clothes," said Dy.

To join the promo, every purchase of animal skin enutles the customer to one raffle ticket that will be drawn on May 15 at the Animaland head office on President Quirino Avenue. The littles will also hit Shangri-La, Rockwell, Eastwood and Alabang Town Center malls for an exhibit.

Sandico-Ong transformed Sassy Kitty into a beautiful goddess of nature, complete with a wig and a tiara from Animaland's accessories collection. For his part, Peralta came up with a fully beaded Italian corded lace bodice and a bouffant skirt made of Mikado silk, plus a tiara made of real pearls and Swarovski crystals.

Animaland has branches in Eastwood City Libis, Shangri-La Mall, Power Plant Mall in Rockwell, Alabang Town Center, and soon to open Mall of Asia in Pasay, and Toys R Us in Robinsons Galleria.

A toast to motherhood.

We were the first family to build a home at Ayala Alabang back in 1978. It took a lot of imagination and courage for us to see the potential in what you may call a very young village back then. Mama Mary converts mayor

CONVERSION Catholicism of Mayor Ricardo Presbitero Jr. of Valladol id, Negros Occidental, is a heartwarming and inspiring story told in the "Miracles of Mary."

Valladolid was dedicated to Our Lady of Guadalupe by Augustinian PURELY Recollects in 1851.

Though Mayor Pres- PERSONAL bitero's family was Aghpayan, when his mother Josephine got cancer, he prayed to a Darang arge icon of the Virgin of Guadalupe that his mother be healed. His prayer was answered.

When his older brother Jack, the former mayor, suffered a stroke and went into a coma, Presbitero again prayed to the Virgin. His brother woke up several days later.

Mayor Presbitero eventually converted to Catholicism.

We attended the Palm Sunday Mass at 7 a.m. in Valladoud, with Fr. Alfredo Gamarcha and his assistant Fr. Bong Gamala leading the people in worship.

Cured

Imee Luzuriaga said she was cured of cancer of the overy through the intercession of Our Lady of Guadalupe, She and husband Sonny, with Romeo and Terry Pison, went to Mexico to thank the Virgin in her Basilica.

The Philippine ambassador to Mexico, the ate Justo Orros Jr., brought them to Msgr. Diego Monroy to witness the signing of the sisterhood pact between the Basilica of Our Lady of Guadalupe and Our Lady of Manaoag Parish in Pangasinan. Ms Luzuriaga said Our

Icon in shells

Lencia Ledesma, now in her 70s, makes awesome icons of saints using shells. She did an 8" x 12" roon of Our Lady of Guadalupe and, in her workshop, she has icons of St. Therese of the Child Jesus and the Sacred Heart of Jesus.

Sta. Ana fiesta

The feast day of Our Lady of the Abandoned, patroness of Sta. Ana, Manila, will be marked May 11-12. A nine-day Novena of Masses began May 3.

Money makes this couple unhappy

DEAR EMILY,

My boyfriend and I are planning to get married next year, but I don't know if I really want to marry him. Three years ago, I had some financial problems and used his money without telling him. I just said I got involved in the "5-6" scheme.

But he found out it was a he and became nightmare. It sort of gave him the license to hurt me physically. He berates me for the minutest mistakes I make and recalls what I did over and over again. I know it's my fault. Had I not done what I did, this wouldn't be happening.

Two years ago, a close male friend who works abroad came home, and we met ac-

EMILY'S

Since then, our relationship became a didn't know he felt the same way about me. Our "illicit" affair started. My pay him. I said I couldn't grow with him as I always found myself wallowing in selfpity every time we fought.

He took it badly. I thought something was going to happen to him so we didn't break up. But, though we patched things up, my feelings have changed.

The other guy and I are still on. My boyfriend learned about it and got mad. I promised him that I would end my relationship with my friend, but I couldn't do it. We still secretly meet and talk.

I thought my relationship with my boyfriend would change as we started to plan for our wedding. But we fought again when I was not in the mood to do something he wanted. He dug up the money issue again and my affair with the other

I told him then I couldn't hang on anymore. He really got angry and told me that, instead of wallowing in self-pity, I should do something to win back his love, trust, care and passion.

I don't know what to do. I want to break up with my boyfriend. But I cannot talk to him in a civilized manner. I am unable to express myself freely because he starts screaming when I try.

He is right I should be thankful to him that, despite what I did, he didn't leave and even took care of me. But every time I make a small mistake, he brings up the old issues and makes me feel guilty over

My friend is waiting for me to change my mind about the wedding. He knows what's happening and always tries to console and help me see things in a positive way, which my boyfriend doesn't do. I don't know what to do.

CONFUSED BRIDE

There's so much distrust between your boyfriend and you that you've reached a dead end in your relationship. You two are just running round and round in a little corner. He has started to sound like a brokenrecord and you allow him to physically and verbally abuse you because you're dripping with guilt.

If this "friend" of yours really loves you and understands what you're going through, why don't the two of you raise the money and repay your boyfriend with interest just to stop all this misery once and for a 17 ls it in the hundreds of thousands that you can't amagine paying it all back, ever?

Your boyfriend has the right to get angry for your absconding with his money.

He has also every right to fume at you for having an affair with the other guy when you are already about to get married But he has no right to abuse you physically and verbally. You're not even married and already he has raised his hand in anger There's so much anhappiness all around.

Are you two being held together only by the money that was lost?

You compounded the money problem by having an affair If it will appease him and ease your guilt, pay back your boyfriend by giving him one of your kidneys or part of your liver, if you can't give him cash)

That's a joke, of course. Just do something. Get away not only from your boyfriend but also your lover to help you clear your mind to think of what you should do next. Not what you want to do. There's a

after having a baby?

to start school and I'm ready to get back into the working world. But it's been a long time since I've had a job. Help! Not Kidding

When I read your e-mail I thought of Emily Katrencik. She's an artist who recently spent 30 minutes a day, five days a week gnawing on sections of drywall at an art gallery. Ever wonder what goes through someone's head while she's munching on drywall? Emily says the thought about "the things in the wall that are good for me, like calcium and iron."

Like Emily, you've got to be prepared to gnaw through all the objections that potential employers will have about your effort to reenter the workforce. Also like Emily, it helps to remember be good for you-doing interviews, answering tough questions and proving that you have the mettle to do the job. I've fisted more strategies to help you get a job after your baby, or any other long term gap from work, below. For more, check out Quigley and Kaufman's book, "Going Back to Work" (St. Martin's Griffin, 2004)

Can you avoid apologizing for your time away? You wouldn't apologize if you had received a research fellowship or gone on a round the world cruse. So don't apologize for having a baby. In It's important to remember that most ing out all of the work-related skills you'd perfected during your time away from the office; how you coordinated projects, managed resources, etc.

Do you know what you want to do? Employers don't know how to handle people who are still sorting out what they want to do when they grow up. Talk to people doing the kinds of jobs that you want to do so you go into all interviews with a good idea of what the

Do you talk to strangers? Not talking to strangers is sage advice for your kids. But it's a terrible way to approach your career. It's important to talk to everyone you can about what they do and who they know. You never know where a great rangget of information or a great lead may come from employers want to see a level of confidence in the people they hire. So do some practice interviews with people you know who have hired people in the past so you can be in shape when you actually start talking to an employer.

Are you comfortable discussing money? Having been out of the workplace for a while, it can be tough to dive into a negotiation over the terms of your employment. That's why it's important to know from the start what compensation you want and to be prepared to fight for it.

Hopefully, these tips will help you gnaw through the objections that get thrown your way in your next job interview.

Nursing student looks for right career

I'M 18 YEARS OLD, MALE AND a first year student. My problem is that I don't like the course I'm taking and don't see myself as a nurse, ever. I'm taking this course because my parents and my eldest sister who is financing my studies are putting pressure on me to become a nurse because they want me to work in the United States and earn plenty of money.

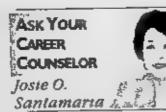

Another problem is that I don't have any strong inclination towards any career. In high school I did not make good in any subject. I was just an average student getting passing grades. How will I know in what career I will do good, considering that I'm just average?

Bewildered Student

Parents have good intentions for their children but such intentions often lead them to impose their needs and their values on their children. Making career choices for children is common among Filipino parents who sometimes "use" their children as a means to improve the family's social status and financial condition.

On the other hand, children who are confused and undecided on what career to choose, open themselves to being influenced, if not controlled by, their parents, and sometimes by their peer group or barkada.

Since you have no strong inclination towards any subject and no work experience to use as criterion for making a career choice, the first step you have to take is to know your career interests and aptitudes. Your career interest will determine what you find enjoyable based on the tasks it involves while your aptitudes are your natural abilities/capacities for learning certain skills. Your career choice should be based on these two important factors; namely, your interests, and aptitudes and also your mental abilities. Later, you also consider external factors like your family's financial capacity to support your career choice, the likelihood of getting a job is the industry and organization where you want to work, erc. Then, you identify the educational program or college course that will prepare you for this career

Interests and aptitudes

The following questions can help you determine your interests and aptitudes: What do I enjoy or like to do? What are my preferences or inclinations? What courses in high school and college did I enjoy (for the subject matter and not because of the teacher)?

Dr. John Holland classified interests into six: artistic, conventional, realistic, investigative, social and enterprising. Each one of us may have two to three combinations of interests. For example, to succeed in sales, a person must have enterprising, realistic and social interests. An accountant should have conventional and investigative interests. A healthcare professional, like a murse, must have social, investigative and conventional interests. Please see inset on "Find your interest, find the right career," which is adapted from Dr. Holland's model.

Making a career choice

The process of making a career choice involves the following steps: 1. Identify your career interests and aptitudes and know your mental

2. List down possible careers that fit your interest, aptitudes and men-3. Choose the best career from number 2 above that is closest to your heart. This will require valid information from persons you know (relatives and friends of your family) and who are actually in that career. 4. Identify the college course or educational/training program that will prepare you for that career There are three levels you may consider depending on your mental abilities and your family's financial

a. Vocational level

b. Technician level (usually 2 years after secondary education) c. Professional level (requiring college degree)

5. Pass all your subjects, and get more than average grades in your major subjects. If you enjoy your major subjects, this will validate your career interests and aprirudes.

6. Determine the industry where you would like to work, e.g., healthcare, banking and financial institutions, call center, information and communication technology, horel and restaurants, etc. The industry will determine the working conditions and whether these will suit your needs and your values. Example of working conditions are working hours, level of control/empowerment given, working position, location, and rewards and challenges.

7. Identify the companies/organizations in your chosen industry.

8. Know the entry jobs in your chosen career available in the organization. Apply for these entry jobs.

Do not accept any job that is opened and offered to you by the company. This will likely change your career path and you are back to Square 1" so to speak.

Choosing the right career may require you to seek the help of your school's guidance counselor who may have standardized interests, aptitudes and mental abilities tests that you can take, and who, more importantly, may provide you with career counseling.

Once you have made up your mind on what career is for you, you can assertively tell it to your parents and your eldest sister. Perhaps, they will allow you to take the college course that fits your career choice so that you can be successful and happy. God

INTERESTS CAN BE CLASSIFIED into the following ways:

· Artistic People with artistic interests like to work in unstructured situations, using their imagination and creativity. They enjoy situations that allow them freedom to be original. They are unhappy if they have to follow rules and procedures. They are intuitive and innovating. Work in the artistic area involves the use if physical, verbal or human materials to create art forms or products. Artistic people are suited to career-related language, art, music, drama, writing, photography, dancing, designing and other creative pursuits. If you have artistic interests, you should avoid being in a conventional career

 Conventional. People with conventional interests enjoy worlong with data such as words and numbers. They like to carry things out in detail or follow through on others' instructions. They like to work in structured environments where things are laid out for them to implement and follow through They have numerical, administrarive, or clerical abilities. They like activities that involve the precise, ordered use of data such as keeping records, filing materials, organizing, computing and systematizing numerical and written data They are likely to operate business machines and use office equipment, work inside an office, sit most of the time, do a lot of paper work in a short period of time, or keep accurate records. Accounting, credit and collection, airline and hotel reservations, data processing, derical and secretarial jobs fix the conventional person. If you are a conventional person, you should avoid the artistic and social careers.

 Realistic. People with realisthe interests enjoy creating things and using their hands and working with tooks, objects and machines or with plants or animals. They like to work outdoors or field work. They usually want to work by themselves. They have achievic and mechanical abilities. This interest finds expression in agriculture, forestry, engineering and technical fields, photography, sports, jewelry making, and garment making. If you have realistic interests, you should avoid artistic, social and epterprising careers.

 Investigative. People with investigative interests enjoy obtaining data through research and analyzing and evaluating data to solve problems. They like activities that involve gathering data from the exploration and examination of physical, biological, behavioral, and cultural events to understand and control them They prefer to work alone rather than with others. They work best 4 in careers relating to science. mathematics, law, economics, and dentistry. If you have investigative interests, you should avoid artistic, social, enterprising careers.

· Social. People with social interest like to work and interact with people to inform, enlighten. helo, train, develop or cure them and are skilled with words. They are patient in explaining things to others, feel competent in dealing with old and young people and generally like to work with others. They are interested in the problems and concerns of others. They would succeed in careers related to teaching, education, guidance and counseling, healthcare, human resources and training, behavioral sciences (psychology/sociology), nursing, therapy, foreign service, and priesthood or ministry. If you have social interests, you will be unhappy in the investigative, realistic and conventional careers.

enterprising interests like also to work with people-to influence, persuade, perform, lead or manage them to achieve organizanonal goals or for economic gain. They have energy and earhusiasm, are good at getting other people to do things for their own or others' benefit, and enjoy leadership, interpersonal and persuasive activities. Management, sales and marketing, business, media and broadcasting and politics are examples of careers that will delight people with enterprising interests. They should, however, avoid investigative and artistic careers.

By Teresa R. Tunay, OCDS

IF THE "HIRED MAN" IN TODAY'S GOSPEL would be found in the contemporary workplace, he would probably be a manager or a supervisor who works for the money and money alone, period. Walang malasakit, walang pakalam, as his people might call him. When threatened by someone or something in his job, he flees, deserting his subordinates and responsibilities as well. Motivated by pure selfishness, he wouldn't go the extra mile for the love, for work, or love of work. In short, he couldn't care less.

Well-we might conclude-that's what usually happens when one works for the money. "Usually," yes, but not necessarily always. We would be judging hastily if we said people who work for the money always deliver mediocrity. There do exist "hired men" who are indeed motivated by money but who do give excellent performance. They are not the irresponsible hirelings who do not give a boot as long as they ger paid. Money may be their strongest reason for working but by no means the only reason behind their drive. With bills to pay, mouths to feed, minds to educate, and loved ones to clothe and shelter, they are clearly in dire need of work; thus, they strive to become better and more principled workers to stay employed. Being a "hired man" means one is paid money to do a job, but not everyone who makes money out of his job becomes a slave of money. When fear of God and the care and welfare of loved ones are the underlying motivation in a person who "works for the money," money becomes a tool for creativity and fulfillment. By Bishop Precioso D. Cantillas, SDB, DD

IN GIVING MOTIVATIONAL SEMINARS FOR teachers, I wouldaiways try to make them traderstand that teaching is not just work and a profession but also a way of life and a vocation-a call from God and our response to His invitation. Those who accept this point of view could easily identify themselves as educators—persons assisting the students towards human maturity—rather than just mere teachers putting ideas and knowledge in the minds of the young. They would also give more importance to showing their students examples of good living than just impressing on them severific theories or technological information or innovation. In the words of Jesus, they would be "shepherds" for the students (sheep) and not just "hired" professionals.

These considerations are also applicable to anyone in any profession or job. A worker whose reason for working is only the pay and material benefits would rather calculate his time and energies in proportion to the compensation package than pour our his whole self into the work. He would not be too willing to risk his life on the job our would be think that his work contributes also to the welfare and growth of the larger society than just his company or his employers.

But one who works not "for hire" but for "love of God" would certainly go beyond the requirements of the job contract; he would look at his work as God's will for him, would do his job as a concrete way of thanking God for his life and energies, and would strive to do good in his profession as his way of life, (E-mail the author of mfvg@skyinet.net)

I agree with you that It is important to be proficient especially in oral English to get into a job as a call center agent since most of the glish-savvy individuals with the customers of call centers are companies overseas. Most of these companies are in the United States and Europe who have outsourced particular business processes to companies based in the country.

If you apply at Ancilla Enterprise Development Consulting for training, you are given a test that comprises both written and oral English to gauge your level of competence. This is what we call a warmup exercise where the language consultant meets with you one on one. If your competency level is adequate, then you go straight to the program for training call centers called Accept (Ancilla Contact Center Preparatory Training). Asian countries urged to reduce mass unemployment Asia's high-flying economies could nise in employment in the 1980s. tumble unless countries reduce mass unemployment, the Asian Development Bank (ADB) warned Thursday.

Nations such as India could step back from seven-to-eight percent growth to three to four percent if unemployment and underemployment are not tackled, the bank's Indian capital.

Without action, "we could see a dramatic change (in India's growth) within five to six years," he told journalists in the Indian capital.

In other Asian countries "two to three percentage points could be knocked off growth very easily," he said

"The outlines of an Asian unemployment crisis are already taking shape." Countries in Asia spend too much time worrying about such issues as fiscal deficits and inflation and not enough time tackling unemployment, Alt

At "a very conservative estimate" at least half a billion people out of a workforce of 1.7 billion in the region are unemployed or under-employed and 245 million of growth," Ali said. new workers are expected in the next decade, the bank said.

won't solve the problem," Alı said.

Governments need to make job creation a "central national objective" backed by time-bound policies, he said

"Strengthening the inclusiveness of the growth process is a precondition to sustaining high growth rates," Alt said, launching an ADB publication "Labor Markets in Asia Issues and Perspectives." The bank noted it was becoming tougher to create sobs and each additional percentage point of economic growth creates less employment than in the past

In China for instance-one of the world's consistently fast-growing economies—a three-percentage point increase in output was needed

NEW DELHI-GROWTH RATES OF to produce a one-percentage point

In the 1990s, a growth rate of nearly eight percent was needed to achieve the same effect as a result of globalization, technological change and competition driving up productivity and reducing the number of workers needed.

All also said voters increasingly exchief economist Ifzal Ali said in the pect governments to deliver in areas as job creation.

In India, where the economy is growing by around eight percent, he cited the 2004 defeat of the Handu nationalist Bharatiya Janata Party government when many voters said they felt left out of the boom.

Governments have no option but to perform," Ali said

Asia has made big strides in cutting poverty but nearly 1.9 billion Asians still survive on less than two dollars a day "because people are either unable to find work or earn too little from the work they do," the bank said

Pailure to tackle joblessness "will undermine the very social fabric," increase political and social turmoil, paralyze policy-making, spur capital flight and "undermine the high rate

The bank also challenged a widely held view among economists that *Strong economic growth alone excessive labor market regulationsuch as high minimum wages or stringent hire-and-fire policies-is stifling job creation in Asia.

"Just look at the organized sector of the economy in a country such as India which employs less than 10 percent of workfarce, you are worrying about this when there is a multitude of people completely being bypassed," said Ak.

Also companies in countries with strict labor laws reported "they have found ways around the law" or authorities do not apply them, said ADB economist Rana Hasan.

in the Philippines, for instance, the minimum wage rate was seen as high by companies but "it's a paper tiger-it's not enforced."

People for the Planet

by Corazon A. Ong photographs by Vicente Carreon

OUR years ago Dr. Enrique Carlos, Jr., owner of the Makati Dog and Cat Hospital in Bel-Air, was prompted to start writing a book on the history of veterinary profession in the Philippines—the first of its kind—because of the sorry state of reference materials he encountered on the subject. "Valuable materials are being lost in the sense that libraries are not well maintained. Nasisira at nabubulok ang mga libro (the books were rotting away) so I thought of doing something about it," he said. He had the materials photocopied, encoded, then saved in compact discs.

After that, he started putting the data together, sat down and wrote in between his practice. The book, titled "Leaders of the Veterinary Profession in the Philippines: A Profile of Presidents of the Philippine Veterinary Medical Association and Affiliate Veterinary Associations," not only provides short notes on and photos of the country's leading veterinarians, starting from the Spanish and American times, but also talks about the profession which has been practised in the Philippines for 100 years now. The country's first batch of veterinarians came from the ranks of the Spanish army.

Scarce information

"It took me four years to finish the book because information was really scarce and far between. I was working like a detective, getting one bit of information from one source, another bit from another source and then marching the pieces to complete the picture," Enrique, Jr. said.

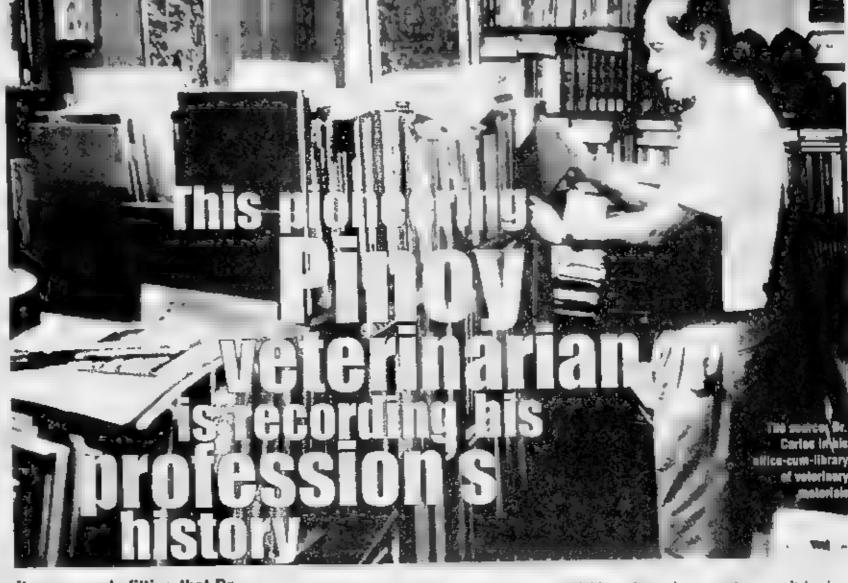

An avid reader and collector of Philippine historical books, Enrique Je would often go to libraries in his spare time, a favorite being the University of Santo Tomas Library, where he would read books in their ongmal Spanish version. Two of the oldest reference materials he used in writing his book were "Una Epizootia en Filipinas" (An Epizootic in the Philippines), published in 1888, and "Guia Oficial de las Islas Filipinas" (Official Gazette of 3 the Philippine Islands), published in 1890. His research, however, would also take him to the United States: Boston, Massachusetts, Washington, D.C. and Norfolk, Virginia, among others "I found the McArthur memorabilia in Norfolk helpful"

He also corresponded with Elaine Engst, director and university archivist, division of rare and manuscript collections of Cornell University in Ithaca, New York as well as with Susanne Whitaker, veterinary reference librarian of the same school. He also got invaluable help from Dr. Ian K. Barker, curator of the CAV Barker Museum of Canadian Veterinary History at the University of Gue-ph in Ontario, Canada.

Transformed room

This doctor's love for books had him transform one room in his Makati clinic into an office-cum-library, where he keeps his collections and where he also wrote the bulk of the 700-page book. The book was released on February 23, 2006, in time for the 73rd convention of the Philippine Veterinary Medical Association (PV-MA) held in Camp John Hay, Baguio, Enrique Jr. served as PVMA president from 1983 to 1984.

He dedicated the book to two of the most influential persons in his life: Dr. Sixto Almeda

It seems only fitting that Dr.
Enrique Carlos Jr., one of the country's most respected animal doctors, would write the comprehensive book on Philippine veterinary practice.
And to think he almost became a dairy farmer instead

Carlos, his grandfather, and Dr. Enrique Carlos, Sr., his father. While finishing his veterinary medicine course at the University of the Philippines in the mid-'60s, Ensique Jr. was working as animal handler cum janitor in their family-run animal clinic on Romualder, St., Ermita, Manila, the Carlos Dog and Cat Clinic. "That was how I initially got my Social Security System card," he said. Prior to graduation, he also worked for a few months at the Makati Small Animal Hospital. "Ako ang taga-bantay ng mga kaso sa gabi," he said. (I took care of the cases at night)

The Romualdez clinic, which was set up by his grandfather in 1927, was the first dog and cat clinic in the Philippines. It closed shop on August 31, 2005. When the old man retired in 1955, Enrique Sr took over the business of running the clinic apart from starting the Makath hospital in 1963. Another clinic, also named Carlos Dog and Cat Clinic, was subsequently opened in Sucat, Paranaque in 1981. This is being managed by Enrique Jr's wife, Rhodora Carlos, who also

Being a vet seems to be a legacy in the Carlos family, because three of the couple's four children also took up veterinary medicine in college but only one is a practicing vet, Dr. Sixto Enrique Carlos, who currently helps in running the Maketi hospital. Apart from his wife and children, Enrique Jr. also has a step-brother veterinarian, Tomas Enrique Carlos, now based in the United States. Uncanny as it may sound, Arsenio Directo, a son of Mang Emong, one of their animal handlers in the Romueldez clinic, also ended up becoming an animal doctor.

Family legacy

Given his family's involvement in the veterinary profession, perhaps it's only fitting that Enrique Jr. should end up writing the first book on the history of the profession in the country. Initially enrolled in Chemical Engineering at UST, he shifted to Veterinary Medicine after his grandmother persuaded him to do so. "She told me to continue the family legacy," he said

It was a legacy that goes way back when he was just growing up. Exposure to animals early in life was a given in their family, with his grandfather holding clinic on the ground floor of their two-story house in Romualdez St. (formerly known as Marques de Comillas St.) while his parents, his siblings and some immediate relatives lived on the upper floor. "The earliest pet I could remember I had was a black and white fox terrier named Happy, whom we adopted after the owner left for the States."

He would also experience raising other pets, like fish and birds, notably finches, mayang palay and kulasisi (parrots). "Once I also kept a pet squirrel which the cat killed after I let the squirrel out of the cage so it could roam in the garden."

But his dream, he said, was to go into cattle and dairy farming "because I really like farming. But dairy farming is a 24-hour job, something I could not cope with," he re-

Dairy farming's loss thus became the gain of small animal practice. Under his supervision, the Makati hospital has, through the years, gained quite a following among animal lovers and owners, some of whom come from as far as Boracay, Lipa and Subic to have their animals attended by Enrique, Jr or his son, Sixto Enrique, whom he is grooming to carry on the family legacy. Looks like there's still a lot of Carlos family history to be made in the veterinary profession.

But the sudden fame is disconcerting, even for this starlet who had started out by hostaging public attention. There's that outrageous screen name, the conspicuous siliconed assets, and a sex video posted on a biog reportedly taken and released by an ex-boyfriend

In 2004, Keanna landed on page 1 for revealing that, as a former escort woman, her clients had included military men and government officials. The exposé led to a Senate investigation that was later scrapped when the stariet, dubbed Kilubot ng Senado by the media, refused to name the politicians involved

Hardly had she lived down that notoriety when Keanna again made the headlines—this time as darling of the masa, the PBB housemate who had garnered 571,607 text votes or 44.2 percent of the total number of votes, making her the big winner in the top-rating TV show. More, by donating the P1-million counterpart cash prize of her P4-million winnings in cash and prizes to the leftist women's organization Gabriela, she found herself being hailed as a latter-day feminist, the woman who refuses to be a victim, the escort girl turned role model for others in similar dire circumstances.

Is she ready for all that?

True to herself

Keanna looks bewildered by the question, taking a full minute before answering with the stock phrase that has so far summed up her mass appeal: "Basta ang alam ko po, nagpakatotoo lang ako. (All I know is, I was true to myself)," she says.

Not that it was easy reverting back to her real self, the person that Keanna had tried twice to leave behind—first by running away from home, and later, by changing her name.

Born 36 years ago in Danao City, Cebu, Janet Derecho Duterte is the second of five siblings born to an engineer and his teacher wife. Life was difficult enough with her father perennially out of work, but when he came home after a short stint abroad and assumed the child-rearing chores while his wife taught in school and sold Tupperware on the side, things could only get worse

"He was very strict," recalls Keanna. He would throw water at her to wake her for school, which she hated, she clauss. "All my siblings became professionals, but I've never been studious or smart. So my father would hit me because of my low grades. Eh bubo nga, eh. (But I'm dull-witted, and that's that.)"

To escape the oppressive household and having to go to college, Keanna married at 17. "He was 27 or 28 then, and had his own business. I thought I'd be the queen of my own home if I married hun," she recalls of her husband. The marriage turned out to be a private calvary. "He would beat me up, point a gun at me, show me he's in control," she says in Filipino

"I decided I needed to be happy more than I needed the money, so I bailed out and ran off to Manila," says Keanna. "My children were very young then and people said I was a bad mother because I abandoned them. But I have supported my kids?" She eventually mer people who introduced her to the sex trade, she says, and she wound up being a kept woman ("syota ng matatanda") for four years, before becoming an escort girl ("a one-night stand") for two years. The money was good, she claims, with her earning from P5,000 to P10,000 a night. When she entered the movies (through the forgettable "Shut Up, I-Memorize Mo Yan,"), her fees went up to as much as P20,000, says Keanna name, ginawa niya akong katawa-tawa (he made me a laughing stock). He didn't even give me a contract."

Despite her earnings, she hardly managed, Keanna says, because she had to support her former boyfriend. "I asked him if he wasn't affected by my being an escort, and he said, if I allow jealousy to get the better of me, how will we eat?"

The same narveté ("katangahan ko") got her embroiled in the sex scandal controversy that had her testifying before the Senate, says Keanna. "I was interviewed on the TV talk show Kontrobersyal,' and I just happened to mention my work. Natisod mila yung story (the reporter just stumbled on the story). I didn't know I'd get into trouble, I was just being true to myself. If the reporter had asked me to name my clients right then and there, I would have done so. I had no inkling of the legal consequences of my action."

Keanna's unwitting expose led her to meet Gabriela party list Rep. Liza Maza. "As a woman's party, Gabriela's main concern is the issue of prostitution," says Liza. "We knew from our on-going studies that new forms of prostitution were evolving and we had to understand these new developments for a more effective advocacy against sexual exploitation. When Keanna broke the silence on escort service as a form of prostitution, we became interested in the extent of its operation-how widespread it is, who are lured into this form of prostitution, the customers, the operators, etc."

Courage

But Gabriela's initial support for Keanna met with cynicism, recalls Liza. "The usual reaction was blame the victim: She's just using us, people said, she's just a prostitute and has no credibility, it's just a diversionary tactic to take attention away from more important issues like the e-vat and wage increase, etc."

Despite the warnings, Liza commended Keanna for her courage. "I also said that prostitution is a serious problem that should be addressed by government and that we cannot effectively address it if the legislators themselves are involved."

The resulting headlines, however, made her uncomfortable, confesses Liza. "Victim bluming intensified and I realized that I did not really know this woman. What if she was just publictry hungry and this was only part of some cheap gummick? So I arranged a personal meeting with her, which is also part of Gabriela's standard operating procedure. We had to ascertain data, know what support the woman wants, how far she is willing to do battle, and Together with a psychologist and counselor, Liza visit-while we were in her place, she received several text messages and calls from other escort girls expressing their support."

The Keanna exposé, adds Liza, became an occasion to look into the current law on prostitution that only criminalizes the prostituted women but not the customers nor the establishments involved in the business. The congresswoman then filed House Resolution 124 calling for an investigation on the use of the escort service business as a front for prostitution.

When she sensed that the resulting Senate hearings were headed towards pressuring Keanna to name her clients, Liza met with the starlet for the second time. "She went to my office at the Batasan incognito to ask for advice. She said that as a result of her Senate appearance, she had been getting death threats. I told her not to name names because she might end up dead, and I meant literally and figuratively. We also offered her the services of our lawyer."

Returning the favor

Liza later filed House Bill 4804, to ensure protective measures and support for other victims of prostitution and penalties for its perpetrators. The bill is being consolidated with other measures on prostitution.

Returning the favor, Keanna named Gabriela as her counterpart charity to receive the P1-million cash prize. Forthwith, the group mobilized its claimed 100,000 membership nationwide, as far as Arakan, North Cotabato and Jolo, says Liza. "The text was agitational," she adds. "Tipong, a text for Keanna is a show of support for women's rights at Gabriela." After all, she adds, Keanna gave a face to the group's advocacy on the issue of sexual exploitation.

Although they have yet to receive the cash as of this writing, Liza says Gabriela will use the money for its crisis intervention program on violence against women

"Keanna's public pronouncements were clear. She had chosen Gabriela to help support its advocacy and service work for women victims and survivors of violence "

After she won, Keanna visited Liza in Congress and to the surprise of many, twitted President Arroyo. Cebu, the starler's homerown, has always been considered GMA's bailiwick. Speaking in Pilipino, the winning PBB housemate greeted the President on her burthday and said, "You know ma'am, I've always been a strong woman since I was a child. I thought that was the way to fight off problems in life. But I've been proven wrong. One should be strong, but also have a heart to understand others. So open your heart, Madam. Please understand that in any crisis, walang masamang kabayo kung mabuti ang kutsero. (A horse is only as good as the one holding its reins) "

A fighter

Her action earned Keanna a glowing endorsement from Liza: "Keanna won because she is smart, hard-working and a fighter. She gained popular support because people see her as a natural. Being real in this country where the highest official of the land is perceived to be a fake, is indeed a breath of fresh air."

Liza sees the startet as an asset in Gabriela's advocacy on women and says that the group is orienting her on the organization's work. But she is not a joiner, demurs Keanna. "I'li always be here for them," she says. "If they need my help, they can just call me and I'll come. But I have to work full-time for my children. Trabaho muna."

The need for a steady income drove her to join the Big Brother house, says Keanna. "I saw the show as a chance for me to erase the escort girl tag and find work." Being confined in the PBB house from Feb. 5 until March 31 was, she says, one of the best things that happened to her. "People have said that staying inside the PBB house is a sacrifice. Anong sakripisyo? Free board and lodging na nga, air-con pal As for being isolated from the outside world, well, I don't mind. Sanay akong mag-isa, ba't pa ako mag-imarte (I'm used to being alone, why should I make a fuss?)"

Keanna was not an instant hit with the other housemates, however, who wanted to evict her immediately for sitting on her ass while they shared the housework. "Eh ang dami-dami naman namin, ba't pa ako makikipag-agawan sa trabaho? Plastikan na yun (But we were so many, why should I try to compete for the chores? That would be so fake). Besides, I want to do the chores that make me happy-like cooking. 1 hate mopping the floor and cleaning the toilet."

But the most difficult directives for her during their confinement in the PBB house, Keanna says, were the wake-up call and the five-minute shower "I really sleep a lot, so getting up early in the morning was a drag." She also takes 30-minute showers, she says, using all the bath essentials she can afford, "Kahit di makakain, dapat kumpleto ang gamit sa banyo. Kahit walang pera, basta mabango ako, okey na (I don't mind starving as long as I have enough bath stuff. More than money, I need to smell good)"

Not that personal hygiene had always been a priority; sometimes the call of nature prevails. "I really had to go," she says of her public irrigation incident just when fellow housemate Rustom Padilla was about to out him self. "I thought if I went back to the house just to pee, it would take too long and I didn't want to keep Rustom waiting, it would spoil the moment."

"KFC"

She had no game plan, says Keanna, she just wanted to be herself, and if that meant confronting other housemates who ticked her off, she was fine with it. "Palaban talaga ako (I'm a fighter)," she says, referring to her admonition to Mich Dulce, whom she had called a "KFC" (actually, KSP or kulang sa pansin, attention-grabber). She just wanted to teach her a lesson, she says of the fashion designer and band member, "She's a spoiled brat and the others indulged her. But I thought, if I didn't tell her off, who would? She should have known what she was getting into She's already 24 so there was no excuse to break down when things got tough." (Mich later volunteered to leave the PBB House, citing stress and how it was aggravating her asthma.)

Keanna's rebellous streak also put her on a head-on collision with Big Brother, the disembodied voice giving orders inside the PBB House. "I was ordered to remove (reggae artist) Budoy Maraviles' headpiece and I didn't want to. I know how important it was to him and I respected that," she says.

For disobeying Big Brother, Keanna forfested a Hong Kong trip with her children. "I thought, luho lang naman yun (it's just an indulgence), I can save up for it. But respecting others, that's important." For two days, Big Brother did not talk to her because of the incident, she says, but she has no regrets. "We're not robots who'll follow orders blindly Besides, it was Big Brother who told us to love and respect one another in the first place and now he's asking us to disregard that? So you see, Big Brother makes mistakes. He's only human like us. He is not God."

If Keanna is big on respect, it's probably because she's finally earned it on the show. It's the best part of her winnings, says this woman who, previous to her PBB stint, was often spoofed for her name and cantilevered breasts "Fame is something I can have even through dubious means. But respect, now that's something you can't buy."

No more flesh

People now know her better, she says. "They no longer regard me only as a former escort. I think it's also because I've changed the way I dress. I realize now that you have to work at getting respect, and how you dress is part er's so nice he actually compliments his opponents on the court. But Alex Compton, shooting guard of the Montafia Jewels in the Philippine Basketball League, (PBL), claims he's had a behavioral turnaround. Before he came to the Philippines eight years ago, Comptom says he lived a typical jock's life in the United States: "I wanted to be popular, to be cool with everybody, just party a lot and have a great time. I was a big drinker." His main motivation in life then, he adds, was "to be a good basketball player, have a good time, have the prettiest girlfriend."

All In The Game

Not that the player's previous disposition matters at all to coaches, players and fans who equally favor his solid game and gentle demeanor. The fact that he speaks Tagalog so fluently has endeared him as well-to basketball-loving Pinoys.

"I came to the Philippines with no expectations. I was excited to play but I didn't expect to be here this long. It was like, let's see how it goes," recalls Compton.

The six-foot cager says it actually took some time before he decided to play basketball overseas. Although his American parents worked as Peace Corps volunteers in the Philippines, he hardly knew anything about his birth country. "I danced the tinikling when I was eight," he says with a laugh "But other than that, wearing a barong and my parents having Filipino friends, I didn't know much about the Philippines. But my parents told me stories, like how my brother spoke Tagalog."

Excited to play

Serendipity helped things along. On January 1996, Compton learned about Philippine basketball while playing for the varsity team of Cornell University in Ithaca, New York. "I was chatting with my assistant coach who said that in 1991, he played in the Philippines. And I said that was where I was born. I wasn't even thinking about it, I just said it in passing. And he said, 'You were born there? You know you can play there? Basketball is huge there.' And it has always been my dream to play basketball overseas," recalls Compton.

People then suggested that he quit college. But Compton, a junior student then, knew there was no way he was trading his Ivy League education even for the sport he passionately loves. "Cornell University is a great school and I said I'm going to graduate first, and then I'll go," he says. "But I also started reading about Philippine history more and a lot of other stuff. I was really planning it out. I was just so excited to come."

Compton thought moving to the Philippines would be similar to living in Thailand, where he stayed with his family for a year

"When we lived in Thailand, we lived in the northeast There were no Americans and nobody speaks English. I had to learn the language. That was what I thought it was going to be like, nobody speaks English and it's going to be hard," he notes.

Compton certainly had no expectations of an easy life. Yet surprisingly, that's exactly what he got. "When I got here, everybody speaks English so well, there's English on TV. There are American restaurants here and there. I thought, this isn't too much of an adjustment, this is really easy," he says.

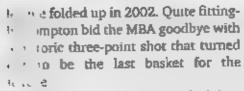

Still, the amable shooting guard made sure to learn the local language. "My mom's a linguist. I was raised thinking that if you're going to live in a foreign country, you have to learn the language there just to communicate and to be respectful of that culture," Compton points out. "It's kind of in my family's background that if you live somewhere, you need to learn the language to understand the common person and interact with them," he adds.

Tagalog trouble

Compton admits that he wasn't too diligent with his Tagalog lessons in his first year. But while playing in the Metropolitan Basketball Association (MBA), he admittedly felt like an outsider. So he picked up the language as quickly as he piled up points on court. "I got a tutor and on my second year, I had two to three lessons a week. I also asked everybody on my team and my friends to speak to me in Tagalog. If I don't understand, I'll ask them. So the first two phrases I learned from my tutor were 'Hindi ko naintindthan' (I don't understand) and 'Ano ibig subihin niyan?' (What does that mean?) I used to say that like 30 times a day. And if I just got five words a day, that helped," he muses.

Things were different on court where nothing, it seemed, could go wrong for Compton as he led his team to the championship and captured the Most Valuable Player award. Unfortunately, his local stint came to a halt as the fledgling pro

If they don't, I really understand," says Compton who has been playing for the amin of swith the Montaña Jewels in the PSI.

Competitive fire

I still really love to play. I love pracing, I love playing to get better, I like on fact, at 32, Compton hasn't lost his reaky touch. Even with a recent calf to, y, he still buries those big shots at crunch time. "I really still have that competitive fire, that drive. I'd love the challenge of trying to guard (PBA) guys like Mark Caguioa, Dondon Hontiveros, Olsen Racela, Jeff Cariaso, Jimmy Alapag. It's a tremendous challenge but I love that, it's fun," he says.

Some well-meaning friends have suggested that he try out in the National Basketball Association (NBA) in the US, but Compton quickly puts the idea into perspective. "There are about 40 jobs a year that open up in the NBA. There are 4,000 people who get struck by lightning every year. So you're a hundred times more likely to get struck by lightning than get in the NBA. It's hard to get in that league. It's the best of the best in the world. I'm not one of them and that's fine," he says candid-

Although Compton also has several product endorsements, he admittedly isn't keen on entering showbiz either "There's a limit to what I can do," he points out.

Right now, Compton would rather stick to what he knows best. "I'm really just holding out for the PBA," he says. "I've already talked to a coach I'm going to train with in the States because I want to get better. I've also planned out my summer specifically for the PBA because if I'm given the luxury, that opportunity to play in the PBA, I want to be ready. I want to be at my best."

The uncertainty is undoubtedly stressful, but Compton surprisingly still wants to stay in the Philippines. "The cultural personality of the Pilipinos really fits with who I am as a person, which is laidback. Like, 'ler's joke around, ler's have fun, ler's hang out," he says. "It's weird. I really feel like this is my home," he continues. "I always wanted to be a dual citizen, but according to the law, I can't be, But I'd rather live here than in the States. I love the Philippines, I love the Filipinos. I just feel like this is the country where I could have the most significant, positive impact for most of my life."

Be Loved in Return

She became so dedicated to har job that she didn't have time for me anymore. She told me I didn't understand her. How could I, when she didn't even talk to me?

Dear Joe.

It all started last November when my best friend called me up. He was having a drinking session with his wife and friends, and asked me to Join them. He had introduced me years ago to Parn, whom I had a crush on, and when he gave the phone to her, everything changed. We talked like old friends. Pam gave me her home number and I started calling her every day until I fell in love with her. Finally, the day came when we became a couple. I was so happy. Last January 6, it was the birthday of my best friend's wife, and everybody was busy having fun. I took the microphone, and everybody thought that I was going to sing. Instead, I gave a little speech about my girlfriend Pam. and finally I asked her to marry me. Everybody cheered and I cried when she said yes. It was the happiest moment of my life.

When Pam and I got together she had this family problem that I understood and accepted. I had no reservations, because she was my fiancée, and I was willing to be there for her. She received a job offer from one of the prestiglous hotels in Makoti, so I told her to grab it, and that she could do it. But she became so dedicated to her job that she didn't have time for me anymore. It got even worse when she was transferred to banquet-no text messages and no phone calls. We storted fighting, and she told me I didn't understand her. How could I, when she didn't even talk to me? Every time I text her, she never answers. When I asked her if she still loves me, she said she didn't know. I tried breaking up with her, but she told me to wait. Wait for what?

It's been weeks since we last talked. I do miss her. I can't stop thinking about her, but I think I'm the only one who still believes in this relationship. I don't know what to do.

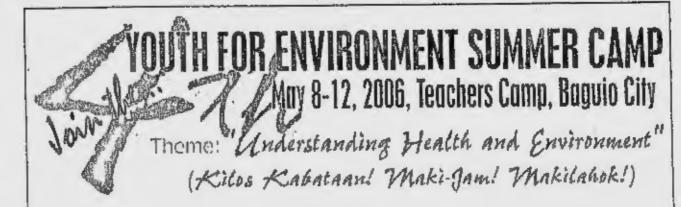

Willie

Dear Willie.

Pam's disinterest could be a manifestation of an inner crisis that she is probably going through right now. Saying that she doesn't know if she loves you is another way of saying she doesn't love you. Being Indifferent to your feelings and not reacting to a break-up means she couldn't care less.

Honestly, Willie, it looks like she has her own world now, and whatever it was that you thought you had when she said yes to your marriage proposal means nothing to her now. She could probably be going through a very difficult time in her life now, but I believe that the least she can do is be honest with you about what she truly feels and not keep you hanging and waiting for something that probably won't happen anymore. If telling someone that we love him or her is essential, then I think letting that person know if that love isn't there anymore is equally important.

Willie, I know how much you love Pam and how much you are willing to do anything for her, but you have to realize that there comes a time in a relationship when simply loving someone isn't enough, when being loved in return becomes as vital as loving the other person. If Pam doesn't love you anymore, then there is no more reason for you to stay. The only way to stop hurting is to stop wanting, and the only way to stop wanting is to start accepting that she is probably not the same person anymore. Then and only then can you move on to finding the happiness that becomes truly rewarding when shared with the person who loves us in the same way.

Hinawakan Ko Ang Katahimikan

Pagkatapos dalhin ng hangin ang lyong paalam, hinawakan ko ang katahimikan sa kislap ng alak, itinali sa riles ng liwanag ng buwan, at ikinulong sa apat na sulok ng kuwadernong naglalaman ng mga iginuhit nating sandali at itinapat sa aking dibdib upang sumayaw sa ritmo ng aking pulso hanggang sa marinig ang pagpitik ng gatilyo ng kalungkutan.

categories," he says. The young artist was given the chance to participate in almost all categories, including still life, landscape, and advanced composition. "I was surprised that my friend and fellow artist Mars Galang and I, who were freshmen at that time, were included in advanced composition. That inspired us to continue with our kind of art-abstract. Very few were into abstract at that time."

Bert would later be among nine students from various levels who were handpicked to go on a traveling show to other universities in Manila. The art caravan often ended at the Ateneo Art Gallery, a place that holds corresponding good memories for Bert.

"Galang, Fred Liongoren, and I were at the Ateneo Art Gallery one afternoon when Mr. Fernando Zobel asked us if we had paintings we'd like to show. We said yes and he went with us back to UP," Bert recalls, smiling, "I was very surprised when he said he liked mine, asked how much it was worth and promptly took it while the paint was still fresh!" He felt so high he couldn't even remember if he took his friends out to party. As fate would have it, Zobel bequeathed this same painting to the Ate-neo Art Gallery.

Positive reviews

But despite getting positive reviews early on, Bert had to drop out of school to earn a living. He had been bitten by the love bug by then, having met Rosemarie Medina. From 1963 till 1968, he worked as an illustrator, layout artist and art director for several publications, among them the Weekly Nation with Larry Alcala and Marketing Horizons magazine under then-editor Horacio Paredes.

"Lay-outing was all manual work then," he recalls. "The titles were pasted letter by letter. Typesetting was called linotype. My job as a layout artist was tedious: pencil in and erase, measure the length of text, fir it in the layout sheet, draw a box for the pictures and if it doesn't fit, ask the editor to fix it," he adds, looking back on those pre-Photoshop days. "Nowadays with computers, available software and the web, artists can do almost anything by clicking the mouse. I wish we had these during our

Creative priorities

In 1970, he married Medina, with whom he has three children: daughters Vikki and Lili, and son Leslie. It was time to refocus his creative priorities and look for something a bit more lucrative. That meant translating his idealism as an artist to suit Philippine Advertising Counselors, which he joined in 1975. "My brother Manuel and his wife Tessie were both in advertising then. Having been exposed to their work, I was influenced to go into advertising."

The jump wasn't that difficult, he recalls. "I simply separated idealism from what was expected of me professionally. I did the best work I could at the office and gave way to my more idealistic side comedian Bert "Tawa" Marcelo.

While moving up from artist to senior art director, Bert also made other visual statements by handling the layout for a number of coffee table books. Purita Kalaw Ledesma was a client; so was his brother, Manny, who was into painting in the '60s as well. "He started to write books about art. 'Contemporary Philippine Art' in 1972 and 'The Philippine Art Scene' in 1977, and the rest is history."

Spiritual rewards

It's hard to imagine an artist holding down anything as prosaic as an office job, but Bert did it, even logging in some time as art director at Memac Advertising in Jeddah, Saudi Arabia some time in 1988. Back in the country for good in 196, he finally turned his back on his day job to focus on painting, which he decribes as "something more spiritually varding." He's been in advertising for nore than 23 years, Bert qualifies. "I was probably rired by then."

As a member of both Sining Marikina and Aquarellists, Bert believes that good abstract art has an unmistakable sense of depth and power that transfixes the viewer, so "he can't walk away from it without being dragged."

In the solitude of his Antipolo City studio, the artist likes to hone his skills quietly and glean inspiration from his favorite abstract expressionists De Kooning, Kline, Brooks, Motherwell and Hoffman.

Since Bert's first one-man show at the Heritage Art Gallery in 2005, the muse has certainly been hands-down urban. "My first show was about what I saw when I was in Jeddah. When I came home for a vacation, I saw the land and the sea from the sky," he says. Now, it has become reversed. He sees architecture while firmly entrenched on land. Twenty of his paintings on this theme are featured in his show, "Images of a Rising Metropolis."

The artist is about to assume another role: that of homecoming son. "My next show in 2007 is about going back to my roots in Ilocos Norte, titled 'Road to Home."

Roberto D. Duldulao's second one-man show, "Images of a Rising Metropolis," runs from May 9 to 18 at the Heritage Art Gallery, 4th Level Bldg, A, SM Megamall, Mandaluyong Gity, tel.110. 634-2436.

of that. I no longer need to show so much flesh to get attention. I don't have to put on too much make-up o mag-ayfort (effort) na maging maganda. Now people know the real me-kikay, komedyante, simple lang (flirty, goofy, simple), someone who only wants to get a decent job for her chil-

The PBB experience definitely gave her a newfound faith in God, says Keanna. "I think God has a purpose for me, so He made me and my ex boyfriend part ways." Rustom led her back to religion, she adds, and so did Ata Coney Reves, another Renewed Christian, who asked her to read the Bible everyday. "I told her I couldn't understand it, ang hirap basahin kasi puro thou ang sinasabi. But she said I should just persist and that's what I do, if only to show God how grateful I am for His blessings. Imagine, sa dami ng taong naghihirap at gustong maging artista, bakit ako pa? Sobra-sobrang grasya na ito." (Of all the people wanting to enter showbiz, it had to be me. This is just too much.)

The blessings keep coming, says Keanna. Aside from her guesting stints, she's doing a sitcom with Bea Alonso tentatively titled, "Maging Sino Ka Man," and the movie "I Wanna Be Happy" with Seiko films. "I can't do drama; me punto kasi ako," she says in her thick Cebuano accent.

Almost perfect

Life would have been perfect, she adds, if only she could have her two boys, aged 17 and 7, with her. "But I have to work and I'm afraid I can't look after them full time. Baka mabarkada lang (they might get into the wrong crowd)," sighs Keanna. The children stay with her father in Cebu, she says, because her estranged husband now has another family. "Actually, we can have our marriage annulled, because I was only 17 then." But she'll definitely have her boys over when they get to college, she adds, smiling.

In the meantime, she's saving up for their future, putting her winnings in the bank and hardly changing her lifestyle. "My Samsung phone is the same and my car is still the second-hand Mazda I've had since 1997," says Keanna. The only additions are the blouses she's had to buy for her TV guestings, and a driver she had to hire. "I've had a lot of money when I was an escort girl, so I'm not dazzled by it all," she says of her PBB winnings, which include P1 million for herself, a condo unit from Chateau Valenzuela, Promac appliances, a Red-Fox laptop computer and a Sony DVD camera.

Despite the 180-degree turn in her life, Keanna says her dreams remain simple. "I want to send my children to school, invest my money in business, break into showbiz. Gusto ko lang maging mabuting tao at makahanap ng matinong partner (I just want to be a good person and to find a good partner)."

Sponsored caregiver students go to Japan

THE FIRST BATCH OF CAREGIVER STUDENTS FROM CHP (CENTER for Healthcare Professions) is now in Japan. Through the auspices of the International Care Aid Organization (Icao), a non-profit Japanese organization with its local counterpart Philippine International Care Aid Organization (Picao), seven caregiver graduates of CHP, a leading healthcare training institution with several branches nationwide, have been selected and recently been granted visas by the Japanese embassy in order to further pursue Japanese studies in Tokyo.

This is a breakthrough development for CHP caregiver graduates and caregiver course aspirants in the light of the much-anticipated opening of the Japanese market to Filipino healthcare workers through the RP-Japan Free Trade Agreement

The Picao through Icao, has a network of over 100 hospitals and nursing homes in Japan, and is currently negotiating to add more. Since early 2005, this organization had been laying down the foundations for its programs, one of which is the selection of partner training and educational institutions that could produce the quality of caregivers and other healthcare workers that its members would demand. CHP (Center for Healthcare Professions), with its strong reputation for quality training and its own network of training and education centers all over the country, was chosen to be Icao's foremost and preferred training and education partner.

Picao selects from interested CHP graduates those who are qualified to pursue further studies in Japan. Once selected, the graduares' travel and schooling expenses as well as living allowances are sponsored by Icao's member healthcare institutions. After passing the required level of Japanese language proficiency, the caregivers then train and work in these hospitals or nursing homes, receiving salaries of around P100,000 per month. After a few years and after passing the caregiver licensure exam in Japan, the caregiver can then receive as much as P200,000 in monthly salary and they are free to work in the healthcare institutions that they please.

"We are very excited about this development, especially because CHP has always wanted to provide the value-added opportunities for its students. As of now, as far as we know, we are probably the first and only healthcare training and education center that has this kind of opportunity for its students", claims Dr. Carlo Ynion, president and CEO of

For his part, Masahiro Hachiya, managing director of leao said, "It is the primary duty of Icao to provide high quality caregivers to its ber institutions as well as its duty to provide quality work environment and decent support to the caregivers. We trust that with our partnership with CHP, we will realize these objectives."

In the mean time, selection for the succeeding batches of caregiver students to be sponsored in Japan is on-going at CHP Interested parties may call 781-9634, 869-9883, (0915)659-4457 or (0917)897-9883. It is projected that about over 100 will be needed within the next 12 months and the projection will reach thousands in the next few years.
